No. 6.

PRESIDENTIAL PREFERENCES. — Mr. Jas. Charlton, of Houston, Tex., sends us the result of a canvass made by the Austen correspondent of the Houston Post, from which it appears that out of 127 members of the Texas Legislature canvassed by him, seventy-eight members declared for Cleveland, eleven for Hill, five for Morrison and four for Palmer, while twenty-three were undecided and six expressed various individual preferences. The only doubt as to Cleveland amongst many of those canvassed was due to his attitude on the silver question. The correspondent says, that if Mr. Cleveland should declare in favor of free coinage Texas would be unanimous for him. However that may be, it seems pretty clear that the Hill boom has not yet made much headway in the big State.

THIRD PARTY PLANS. — For some reason the conference of labor organizations and independent reformers that was to be held at Cincinnati on February 23 has been postponed until Tuesday, May 19. Captain C. A. Power, of Terre Haute, Ind., says that the postponement is due to "the unwarranted interference of certain parties," but he declares that the conference will certainly take place on May 19, and that all organizations already committed to the platform drawn up at Ocala are invited to send delegates. The purpose is announced to be the formation of a third party and not the consideration of the question as to whether or not a third party is needed.

THE NEW YORK WOOL GROWERS. — We published in the last issue of THE STANDARD a letter from Mr. Norton, of East Bloomfield, disclaiming the credit for the excellent resolutions adopted at Honeoye, and declaring that such credit belongs to Mr. Sanford W. Abbey, Secretary of the Wool Growers' Association. Mr. Abbey declares that no one man is entitled to the credit. He says: "The fact is, the Ontario and Livingston sheep breeders are getting their eyes opened. They are having the cobwebs swept away, so to speak, and they recognize that their success depends on the success of the manufacturer, and that even then they are compelled to take just what the manufacturer sees fit to give them." He adds, the resolutions created a great rattling among the dry bones, and "I am pitched into from all quarters, though I do not mind it."

NOTHING LIKE SO BAD. — We fully agree with the New York Times that to change the issue now dividing political parties from one of taxation to one of currency would be most injurious to the Democratic party and calamitous to the people, whose interest in this vital question has just been aroused. The Times goes too far, however, and weakens its own cause when it declares that a free coinage measure would be more mischievous than the Force bill. This is an eminently commercial view of politics. The worst that can possibly come from any mistake in currency legislation is pecuniary loss, whereas the Force bill aimed a direct blow at popular government, and if the policy that it would have inaugurated were once carried to its logical conclusion, the people would finally lose the power either to make mistakes in legislation or to correct them. If the Force bill could have been passed, and the powers that it granted could have been used effectively, at a single election, to give the Republican party complete possession of the Federal Government, the era of constitutional free government in America would have ended, never to be restored, save by forcible revolution. If mistakes are made in currency questions many will suffer in pocket, but recovery from such disasters is reasonably rapid and absolutely certain after the mistake is once rectified. Such evils cannot be compared with the dastardly blow aimed at free institutions by the Massachusetts malignant, Senator Hoar, and his allies.

A DRASTIC ANTI-TRUST LAW. — The Indiana Senate has passed the most sweeping measure ever enacted against trusts in that State. The bill declares that all trusts, pools, contracts, combinations, arrangements or corporations that attempt to decrease the output, control prices or limit production shall be considered conspiracies to defraud the people, and every person who is a member of such organization shall be subject to a fine of from one thousand to five thousand dollars and imprisonment from two to five years. This provision is made to apply to any stockholder in a corporation that has entered into a trust, while corporations thus offending, if organized under Indiana laws, will have their charters forfeited. Persons injured by the operations of the trust or pool are authorized to sue for damages. It seems to us that this is about as far as any legislature can go without imposing the death penalty, and we shall be curious to see to what extent the new bill, if it becomes a law, will operate to prevent these combinations investment of trade from carrying on operations in Indiana.

WILL COME HOME TO ROOST. — The Indiana House of Representatives has passed a bill requiring foreign insurance companies to keep on deposit in that State not less than fifty thousand dollars either in cash, municipal bonds or mortgages on Indiana property, such deposit to be subject to taxation. Any foreign company failing to comply with the provisions of the bill will be fined $100 a day during the continuance of such failure. What do the people of Indiana expect to make by this? Do they suppose that foreign insurance companies will do business in their State at smaller profits than they earn in other States? If they do not expect this, why is it they cannot understand that, unless profits are exorbitant and some monopoly exists, the rates are now what competition will make them, and any addition to expenses of the companies will simply add to the cost of insurance in Indiana.

ATTACKING HILL. — The Plattsburg Republican, a Democratic paper owned by Smith M. Weed, has hitherto been an ardent admirer and supporter of Governor Hill. It recently, however, came out with a remarkable editorial article entitled, "A Broken Idol," in which it frankly admitted that, though it had defended Governor Hill against the assaults made upon him immediately after the recent Presidential election, in which he was charged with treachery to the Democratic Presidential candidate, the appearances were unquestionably against him in the matter. It defended him, it says, because, despite these appearances, it could not believe him guilty of such monumental treachery. History, it continues, has been making fast since that time, and the Governor's conduct in seeking the United States Senatorship and betraying the Hon. Smith M. Weed, clearly demonstrates that its former belief that he was incapable of treachery was not well-founded. This carries with it a clear intimation that the Plattsburg paper is now prepared to believe that the appearances which two years ago indicated that Hill had betrayed Cleveland were worthy of more consideration than it then was willing to give them. THE STANDARD cannot join the Plattsburg Republican in lamenting the defeat of Smith M. Weed; but if the friends of the latter propose to assist in curtailing the pernicious influence that Mr. Hill has exerted so long in New York politics, some good will certainly come out of the difficulty that has arisen between the "statesmen" of Elmira and Plattsburg.

A BLOW AT THE RANCHMEN.—The American Live Stock Commission Company was chartered in 1889 under the laws of Illinois. It has a capital of $250,000, divided among about 350 shareholders, many of whom are ranchmen and stockmen. The farmers' organizations of several states hold stock in it. The object of the company was to reduce the cost of marketing stock. It accepted the rules of the National Live Stock Exchange, as to rate of commission, but returned the net amount of the commissions, a dividend of about 50 per cent., to the shippers. The National Live Stock Exchange—or rather those of its members who are not producers—objected to the methods of the commission company and adopted an amendment to their constitution prohibiting members of the Exchange from dealing with or having any connection with the Live Stock Commission Company. Under the provisions of this amendment, E. H. Robinson, a representative of the commission, was suspended by the Exchange. If this had been done by a trades' union of working men it would have been denounced as a criminal conspiracy, and those engaged in it would have been lucky to escape criminal prosecution. The case seems to be different, however, with a boycott by business men, and Judge Snyder, of the Illinois Circuit Court, sitting at Belleville on Monday last, rendered a decision upholding the action of the National Exchange. This is the kind of legal decisions that inspire the despised Granger with the belief that the law is administered in the interest of the monopolist, and against the interest of the producer.

TAX REFORM IN LOUISIANA.—The Louisiana Single Tax Club of New Orleans is doing an excellent work in pointing out to the people, at a time when tax reform is a question of general interest, the advantages of the Single Tax as a method of equitably raising revenue. Its showing of the gross violation of existing law in the present assessment of New Orleans will also probably do good; though the club is likely, while urging the equal, assessment under the present laws, of all property, to run against the obstacle that the Manhattan Single Tax Club encountered in New York. New Orleans, like this city, keeps its assessment low, in order to avoid bearing a disproportionate share of State taxation. Those familiar with the law, and with the fact that it is violated, connive at the violation, because it is customary in the rural districts. The true remedy, both there and here, is the strict enforcement of the law everywhere; though, as Mr. Shearman pointed out, it is probably not the particular mission of Single Tax men to begin a crusade of that kind so long as taxes on improvements and personal property continue. In any event, they will not be strong enough, alone, to accomplish such an object, but it does no harm to awaken public interest in the question of taxation whenever the opportunity is offered.

SENSIBLE WOOLEN MANUFACTURERS.—“The Wool Consumers' Association,” in which the largest New England manufacturers are interested, has openly taken issue with the Wool Growers' Association on the tariff question. The new association sarcastically reminds the secretary of the Growers' Association that recent political events hardly warrant his rejoicing over the “cheering and permanent effects of the laws that have been passed in the interest of protected industries.” It also takes issue with the old National Association of Wool Manufacturers and declares bluntly that “free wool is in the interest of the whole people, while bargains for privation and exclusion are simply in the interest of certain monopolies of very limited consequence to the public,” and that free wool has become an essential element in the permanent prosperity of wool manufacturers themselves. This is merely another sign of the times. The sheep growers of New York are discovering that they have been humbugged, and the wool manufacturers are repudiating the policy of protection, which they once upheld. The only people really grieved are the officers of two associations, who have made a handsome living through the promotion of the protection superstition.

STATE TAXES ON CORPORATIONS.—The Indianapolis Sentinel points to the fact that the State of Wisconsin meets its expenses by taxes on railways, insurance companies and other corporations, and levies no direct tax on the people of the several localities, and says that this is the proper source of State revenues. It declares that a plan of taxation that will separate State and local taxes is the only one under which fair assessments can be brought about. Under such circumstances the local assessors, it thinks, would have no inducement to undervalue property, and a fair and reasonable basis of taxation could thus be had. The plan proposed by the Sentinel is, in some respects, a step backward, but so long as the present system of taxation continues, it does have the merit of removing the inducement to undervaluation, about which so much has recently been said in this and other cities. The only advantage that the advocates of the Single Tax could derive from such a change would be the ascertainment of values which would serve as a basis for more correct estimates of possible revenue under the Single Tax than can now be made. The discussion of the subject is a good thing, as is every other discussion which tends to concentrate public opinion on the great problem of taxation. How widespread this debate is becoming is seen by all readers of newspapers.

TO ARCHBISHOP CORRIGAN.—THE STANDARD is a secular newspaper. It has no quarrel with any religion, and it wants no controversy with any church. It has no disposition to intrude its opinions concerning questions of religious doctrine and ecclesiastical discipline in the Roman Catholic or any other church. Men who hold sound economic views may, through infirmities of temper and overweening pride, subject themselves properly to discipline by any organization that commands obedience in conduct and conformity in religious doctrine. If such things happen, unless the question at issue is one of human rights or common concern, it is not for outsiders to interfere. Though Archbishop Corrigan may not understand that such is the case, this has always been THE STANDARD's policy, and it will continue to be its policy. With the administration of ecclesiastical affairs in this metropolitan see it has no concern, but with any attempt by any ecclesiastical authority to restrict the liberty of American citizens in matters of economic belief it will concern itself, and it will concern itself very much indeed.

In preparation for a conference that is to be held next week in the Cathedral, in this city, Archbishop Corrigan has sent to every priest in this diocese three propositions concerning which each one is expected to express his opinion. One of these relates to dogmatic theology, another to canonical law and the third to what the Archbishop is pleased to call moral theology. It is with the latter alone that we are concerned. It is written in Latin, and is thus translated by the Herald:

Albertus, a man imbued with the principles of the moderate Socialists, believes that he has a right to attend those meetings in which the property of individuals in land is attacked. He is advised by a friend, an excellent Catholic, that he is in serious danger. He answers that he is doing no wrong, since the matter is merely political and beyond the province of ecclesiastical authority.

However, to please his friend he goes to two confessors. The first to whom he goes utterly condemns him, both because of the doctrine which he maintains and also because of the reserved case which is incurred by those who attend the above mentioned meetings.

He is received more mildly by the second confessor. The latter tries to persuade Albertus that he should not make himself conspicuous in the defence of the doctrine which certain people cavil at because they do not understand it, and also that he should avoid those meetings—not that he has not the right to attend them, but he should not for the sake of peace and to avoid giving spiritual offence to weaker brethren.

The question is, first, what opinion must we hold concerning the conduct of Albertus and the reasons alleged by him; second, what judgment must we pass upon the answers of the two confessors?

There is no necessity for beating about the bush. Everybody understands what this means. It is aimed at Catholics who still attend the meetings held by Dr. McGlynn. Into the question as to whether a Catholic can attend meetings directed by an excommunicated priest and still remain a Catholic, we do not propose to consider. With Dr. McGlynn's quarrel with the Catholic Church, on general grounds, we have nothing to do. With any attempt by Archbishop Corrigan to discipline, coerce, or otherwise unduly influence men for holding the opinion declared by Dr. McGlynn on the subject of private ownership in land we have something to do, and we shall await with keen interest the outcome of this attempt by the Archbishop to compel his priests to declare their opinions on a question of political economy, which is an issue in American politics and the moral aspects of which have been finally passed upon by the court of last resort in the Archbishop's native State. The form of the proposition will make the issue a clear cut one, as to whether a Roman Catholic bishop can and dare attempt to interfere in politics after the fashion of Archbishop O'Brien in Canada. THE STANDARD does not court any such issue, but it will cheerfully accept it if necessary.

BLAIN THE FREE TRADER.—Secretary Blaine is rapidly forging ahead with his Free Trade policy. It is somewhat difficult to judge of the probable effect of his negotiations with Canada, because it is almost increditable that the present Canadian Government can really be in earnest in seeking any considerable freedom of trade between Canada and the United States. The mere fact that negotiations are promised, however, has caused many longing eyes to be turned toward our Northern border, and numerous industries are beginning to cherish the hope of a broader market from which they are now cut off by stupid laws in restraint of trade. We cannot see how any real reciprocity is possible without the acceptance by Canada of the odious McKinley rate of duties, which seems highly improbable, and we fully share the distrust of the Canadian Liberals as to sincerity and straight forwardness of Sir John MacDonald in the matter. One thing is reasonably certain, and that is, if the people of Canada and the United States are permanently to enjoy the advantages of reciprocal good will, based on a true conception of the solidarity of their interests, it will be to the Liberal party that the necessary Canadian legislation will be due, and that is the very party whose defeat is sought by the Canadian Premier in his present negotiations with Mr. Blaine. It will be time enough to rejoice over these negotiations when we have examined the resulting treaty.

But a treaty of reciprocity has actually been concluded with Brazil. In consideration, apparently, of the free admission to the United States of Brazilian sugar and molasses—hides and coffee have for a long time been on our free list—Brazil agrees to admit free of duty our agricultural products including all kinds of preserved meats, except ham, and tools and machinery generally, except sewing machines. It also agrees to lower its existing duties 25 per cent. on a number of manufactured articles, though boots and shoes are excepted from this concession. Precisely why these exceptions are made we do not know, but the probability is that certain infant industries having "a pull" in the Brazilian government could explain the matter. There appears to be general satisfaction with the treaty, and a number of manufacturing concerns are looking to it to result in an increased Brazilian demand for their wares. American exports to Brazil last year amounted to about $9,000,000, of which $6,879,881 were shipped from this port. They consisted largely of coal oil, lard, flour, cotton cloth, nails, spikes, wire, soap, butter, potatoes, furniture, biscuit, candles, marble, bacon and onions. Several of these items are included in Brazil's new free list, but most of the articles named in the treaty for free admission or reduced duties do not appear to have been exported to Brazil at all last year. It is highly probable that the treaty will cause some increase of trade between the two countries, but such increase will not amount to much so long as our existing tariff against imports from other countries is maintained. Duties on materials entering into most of our important manufactures make it impossible for our manufacturers to compete with those of England, in Brazil or elsewhere, and, so long as we are undersold, our sales will be small.

But it matters little what the immediate results may be. So far as there are any they are sure to be good. If a little freer trade with Brazil works well, the American people are sure to demand more of a good thing. If the negotiations with Canada result in any reasonable approximation to Free Trade with that country the aroused attention of our people will cause them to demand an extension of the system, so as to include the countries that are the chief customers for our surplus products. Mr. Blaine will not be able to confine his reciprocity to agricultural countries which threaten no real competition to our protected monopolies, and may absorb some of the products of the latter. The farmers are already beginning to see through this, and the Council of the Alliance is preparing to ask Congress to enact a law to permit any American ship leaving our port with a full cargo, two-thirds of which shall be composed of American agricultural products, to bring back a cargo of manufactured products from other countries free of duty. The farmers are evidently beginning to understand what trade means, and what its obstruction does for them. Every step that Mr. Blaine takes toward reciprocity, helps educate the people to demand further progress toward Free Trade, and he deserves the sincere gratitude of Free Traders for what he has done already.

One immediate result is, that men are beginning to call Free Trade, Free Trade, and not "tariff reform." The New York Herald, for instance, in a recent editorial, congratulates Messrs. Harrison and Blaine on their abandonment of the protection superstition, and says:

Free Trade with Brazil is a good thing? Free Trade with all the Southern republics is a good thing? Then why not extend its limits and give us Free Trade in every market in the world? The logic of the situation is as cheering as it is inexorable. If this ounce of Brazilian tenderloin is good, why not give us a first-class poterhouse steak?

The Herald reads the lesson aright. Mr. Blaine may still imagine himself a Protectionist, but he is a practical Free Trader, and is doing more just now to create Free Trade sentiments than even the Democratic tariff reformers. They dwell on the burdens that a protective tariff inflicts on the people, but they propose to lighten those burdens and not to abolish them altogether. Men may become keenly interested in this phase of the subject, and never even consider Free Trade. When, however, markets are once opened by reciprocity treaties; when farmers come to see that trade means the swapping of their products for manufactured goods that they need; when languishing industries begin to revive in the hope of foreign orders to be paid for in foreign goods; then the people will be compelled to consider what trade really is, to see its advantages and to demand that, of course, it be free as all other activities and energies of the people for production should be free. To men whose eyes have thus been opened, even tariff reform is placed on the defensive, and taxes that restrict trade will be denounced as inexcusable, unless no other method of raising the necessary public revenues can be found.

THE STANDARD is a Free Trade paper. It salutes Mr. Blaine. It offers its condolences to Mr. McKinley.

THE CANADIAN LIBERALS' DILEMMA.—The Liberal party of Canada has for some time been practically united in demanding more liberal commercial relations with the United States. As their party has visibly grown in strength, largely through the blunders, or worse, of the party in power, the Liberal leaders had begun to look hopefully for a victory at the general election, which would have taken place a year hence, in due course, through the expiration of the term of the present Parliament. Seeing the drift of things, the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, has suddenly determined to dissolve Parliament and go to the country on the issue of Canada's trade relations with the United States, the very issue demanded by his opponents. Sir John, however, loses nothing of his craftiness in his old age, and he does not intend that the issue shall take the shape desired by the Liberals. He says :

The Dominion Government has, through her Majesty's Government, made certain proposals to the United States for negotiations looking to the extension of our commerce with that country. These proposals have been submitted to President Harrison for his consideration, and the Canadian Government is of the opinion that if the negotiations are to result in a treaty which must be ratified by the Parliament of Canada, it is expedient that the Government should deal with a parliament fresh from the people rather than a moribund House.

This sounds fair, but it hardly seems possible that the Canadian conservatives, in view of their recent utterances, can make a proposal that the administration is likely to accept, and the ostentatious choice of the date of the expiration of the present Congress as the time for beginning negotiations has in it a slight suggestion of a slap in the face to the discredited party still in power. Furthermore, Secretary Blaine has publicly declared his opposition to any half way reciprocity, demanding complete reciprocity or none. Whatever Mr. Blaine's attitude may be, Sir John's manifesto makes it clear that the existing Canadian Government does not seek complete reciprocity. He quotes Mr. Wyman's declaration that the Liberal policy is "Free Trade with the United States and a common tariff with the United States against the rest of the world." He denounces such policy as a treasonable attempt to discriminate against the mother country and declares that loyal Canadians will never consent to it.

We do not see how the Liberals are to meet this charge, unless it is by acknowledging its truth and taking the consequences, whatever they may be. It is an essential part of any scheme of commercial union that permits Free Trade between Canada and the United States, that the tariffs maintained by the two contracting governments against the rest of the world shall be equal and uniform. As there is no present prospect of repealing the McKinley bill until Mr. Harrison's term as President expires, complete reciprocity is impossible, unless Canada imitates our folly and accepts this new "tariff of abominations." Surely the Liberals dare not go before the people with such a programme! A year hence they could have advocated complete reciprocity with the United States, involving, as it does, uniform customs, with a reasonable prospect that the American tariff would soon be scaled down, but they cannot entertain any such hope for the present, and the Conservative Government probably had this fact in mind when it determined to force a contest, now, instead of allowing it to come, in due course, a year hence.

If the Canadian Liberals had never permitted their minds to be perverted by the Protection superstition, their escape from the dilemma in which their foxy old Premier has apparently placed them would be easy, and their triumph certain. They would in that event demand Free Trade, regardless of American legislation, and it would be their opponents who would then be called on to defend themselves against the charges of subjecting Canadian legislation to foreign interference, and of enacting laws intentionally hostile to the commerce of the empire of which Canada forms a part. What the Liberal party of Canada wants is liberal ideas, a progressive programme, and the courage of its convictions. Perhaps, first of all, it needs a leader.

THE SUPREME COURT AND DIPLOMACY.—

The hysterical protests against interference with the diplomatic powers of the President and his Secretary of State by the Supreme Court have apparently subsided since Chief Justice Fuller announced that that tribunal would give leave to counsel, representing the British Government, to file a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent the United States District Court of Alaska from proceeding to carry out its decree of forfeiture in the case of the schooner Sayward, libelled for unlawfully taking seal within the waters of Bering Sea.

We hope that the court will be able to go further, and review the whole proceeding below. The present Secretary of State of the United States claims for our Government, as the successor of Russia's rights in the premises, exclusive jurisdiction over the whole of Bering Sea. The British Government, at the request of Canada, resists this claim. In the good old days of song and story, blood and folly, the first preliminary to any final settlement of such a dispute would have been the cutting of one another's throats by a large number of men absolutely indifferent to the question, and devoid of a single idea on the merits of the dispute. Instead of shouting "Brittania Rules the Waves" and ordering out its iron-clads, the British Government comes into court and declares that the seizure, which is made the test case of the controversy, is not even warranted by American law, and it asks the Supreme Court of the very government with which it is contending, to review the judgment already rendered in the case. Sir John Thompson, Attorney-General of Canada, appears as counsel for the British Government, accompanied by American counsel, who represent the owner of the vessel, the propriety of whose seizure and condemnation is in dispute. This seems to us about as much an improvement on the barbarism of the past, as is the reference to a jury of a question of disputed ownership over the savage custom of allowing the stronger man of the two to kill the other and seize the property in dispute.

Suppose the Supreme Court shall decide that the court below erred, and that the United States have not the jurisdiction claimed for them by the Secretary of State, that does not preclude further negotiations by Mr. Blaine. It would not even prevent him from asserting his view as against that of the Supreme Court, if he were foolish enough to do so. But it is to be assumed that Mr. Blaine does not desire to claim for the United States anything that they are not legally entitled to. If such is the case he would naturally prefer to have an interpretation of the law by the Supreme Court, rather than depend on the decision of an unknown Federal court in one of the territories. If the Supreme Court upholds his claims, Mr. Blaine will be in a far better position than he is now in and the British Government will appear ungenerous if it rejects the decision it has sought. But the decision is one of far greater importance to the American people, who would like to have some other judgment beside that of Mr. Blaine on a point of law, the settlement of which involves the tremendous question of war or peace.

Take the case all in all, it seems to us to mark a much-to-be-desired new departure in the settlement of such questions. We hope the Supreme Court may find that it has jurisdiction and that the whole question may be fully argued before it and decision rendered.

SINGLE TAX PAPERS.—We are occasionally asked for an opinion as to the effect on THE STANDARD of attempts to maintain local Single Tax papers. We doubt if these attempts have much direct effect, one way or the other. Indirectly their effect is bad. THE STANDARD needs for its support and development the undivided and persistent support of all Single Tax advocates. We have already been able, without impairing its character as an advocate of our principles and a compendium of Single Tax news, to broaden its scope sufficiently to attract readers from beyond the ranks of our movement. This not only makes it more interesting to Single Tax men, but increases its efficiency in propaganda work. This is the natural line of its development, and in order to accomplish all that is possible in this direction it ought to be able to pay fair prices for contributions and to make investigations, more or less expensive, of matters of special interest and importance to its readers. We cannot always depend on voluntary unpaid work for compiling the statistics so much needed even now. Hard work by Single Tax men to increase its circulation will tend to increase THE STANDARD's prosperity, and any diversion of such effort toward struggles to maintain local papers is, to that extent, injurious to this paper and to the cause it represents.

We fully recognize the fact that THE STANDARD owes it to that cause to do all that is in its power to secure the wide dissemination of our ideas, but we think it meets that obligation. It keeps up the Single Tax Library of cheap Single Tax literature, at no profit to itself, and it freely tenders to the National Committee, to be used without credit, all its contributed articles and news, for reproduction in the ready print matter furnished by that committee to hundreds of weekly newspapers in all parts of the country. In this way thousands of readers are reached who could not be induced to subscribe for a Single Tax paper. Furthermore, with a view to spreading our doctrines, it maintains a far larger exchange list than it needs for its own purposes.

It is true that THE STANDARD is not a cheap paper. The demand of its constituency is for a high class publication that cannot, in the nature of things, be cheaply produced. Yet its terms have been purposely so arranged that very few people, indeed, can honestly say that they cannot afford to subscribe for it. One dollar is not a large sum to save up by any man who greatly desires something, and one dollar will enable any one to obtain THE STANDARD for four months. This price is but a fraction of a cent per copy over its price in its old form. If Single Tax men would get this idea into their heads and vigorously canvass for subscriptions, instead of trying to get up cheap rehashes of the news gathered by THE STANDARD, they would serve the cause more effectively and resist a tendency toward the diffusion of their energies that has already, in many ways, retarded the progress of our movement.

THE STANDARD is not begging the support of Single Tax men. They surely appreciate the services it has rendered to our cause in the past, and understand the enormous advantage that it is to our movement to have an able and prosperous paper to gather and present all news affecting it, to review current events from our standpoint, and to defend our principles whenever they are assailed by persons or papers of sufficient prominence to demand a reply. A paper that can be depended on to do this permanently must be a successful business enterprise, and there is no conceivable work in which the friends of the Single Tax can engage more valuable to the cause than earnest work to extend the circulation and promote the prosperity of THE STANDARD. This is not the only thing to be done, but no other work ought to be permitted to stand in the way of this.

PARNELL'S OBSTRUCTION.—It seems that the leaders of the English Liberal party have been willing to so far humor Mr. Parnell's demand for definite pledges, as a condition to his own retirement, as to give assurances concerning the control of any Irish Parliament over the police and land question, under a Home Rule scheme, that are pronounced satisfactory by O'Brien and Dillon. Harold Frederic telegraphs the Times that Parnell positively promised O'Brien that, if such assurances were given, he would retire, and thus cease to confuse the existing situation. It was, of course, understood that the Liberal leaders could only give assurances, as to what they were willing to undertake, and not as to what a parliament yet to be elected would actually do. Any promise given beyond that would be manifestly so reckless that the assumption that it was made to be broken would be a reasonable one.

Now that the conditions named by him have been met, and O'Brien and Dillon have declared that they are satisfied with the assurances given, Parnell makes a new demand as the price of his retirement, which, we understand, is for a written guarantee from Gladstone that, if called to power, he will do certain specific things. He knows perfectly well that no leader would sign such a paper, and that no decent men will join him in demanding a written pledge following a spoken promise. Such a demand is simply an insult to Mr. Gladstone. Parnell, however, makes compliance with this new demand, the condition on which alone he will permit Irish unity. This is equivalent to saying that he will not retire at all, and the outcome goes to prove that Mr. O'Brien's vanity has not merely made him ridiculous, but has worked actual harm to the Irish cause.

An increasing number of English Liberals are growing weary of bothering about a people so fatuously led, and there is a disposition among them to force several questions which concern Englishmen and Irishmen alike to the front. According to Mr. Rylett, in his letter published elsewhere, this policy actually was carried out in the recent campaign in Hartlepool. Mr. Gladstone, however, hangs on to the Irish issue, and he is able to prevent any formal change of front. This may be due to an old man's disinclination to changes of policy, but much more likely it is due to Mr. Gladstone's personal disagreement with his inevitable successors in the leadership and direction of the Liberal party. If Parnell's selfishness and treachery shall continue to make the Irish issue an impossible one, however, the social issues cannot much longer be held back, even by Mr. Gladstone. As the right settlement of these questions is, after all, the only hope for either England or Ireland, there will, perhaps, be no real cause for regret if the treachery of Parnell and the folly of those who countenance him shall retire the Irish question to the background. If the Irish can stand it the English surely can do so.

TURN THE TRAITORS OUT.—No eleventh-hour repentance can excuse Senator Ingalls' persistent appeals to passion and prejudice during his long career, nor cause thinking men to cease to rejoice that his public career is, for the present, about to close. Nevertheless, Mr. Ingalls has demonstrated that he has more conscience than some of the Pharisees who professed to be shocked at his declaration that purity in politics is an "iridescent dream." In his personal statement in the Senate, last week, the Kansas Senator declared that many months ago, while he was occupying the chair of the Senate in the absence of the Vice-President, he resisted "many urgent importunities and many strenuous solicitations" to co-operate with those who were seeking to obtain the establishment of a closure rule by methods that he then believed, and still believes, to be "revolutionary and subversive of the fundamental principles of constitutional government."

Note the words. Mr. Ingalls does not say he was argued with, but that he was urgently importuned and strenuously solicited to usurp power to do an act, the advocates of which knew that he regarded as "revolutionary and subversive of the fundamental principles of Constitutional government." That is to say a conscienceless crowd of conspirators urgently importuned a high public officer to violate his official oath and his conscientious convictions in order to carry out a revolutionary scheme to which they were committed.

No accusation more serious has ever been made against his fellow members by a Senator. Had Mr. Ingalls yielded to the importunities of his tempters he would have committed deliberate treason and perjury. Who are these suborners to perjury and inciters to treason? The matter ought not to stop with Mr. Ingalls' speech. The facts should be investigated and the guilty parties should be ignominiously expelled from the Senate.

PATERNAL RAILWAY LEGISLATION.—Senator Cullom's bill to amend the Inter-State Commerce law, recently reported to the Senate, authorized common carriers to enter into contracts or agreements with respect to traffic, with the consent of the Inter-State Commission, whenever the latter shall decide that the public interest or the general welfare will thereby be subserved. Such contracts must be filed with the commission and approved, and they shall be binding on the party thereto, though the commission may annul them at any time when, in its opinion, the public interests require such action. If the business of transportation ought to be carried on by private parties, this law is the outcome of the rankest paternalism. If such business ought not to be carried on by private parties we should like to know why. The right and duty of the State to make and maintain public highways is perfectly clear, but how does the State acquire the right to control and regulate the business of common carriers over such railways to the extent here indicated. Regulation has always been insisted on, but practically the Inter-State Commerce Commission is by this bill given control equal to that of an owner over the transportation business of the United States.

The men who advocate this measure would doubtless be shocked if they were called Socialists, and they would probably resent, as a suggestion to undue Radicalism, the proposition that the States shall own railways; that private parties shall be permitted to use them under such regulation as is necessary to prevent collisions and accidents, and that the Inter-State Commerce Commission shall confine itself to such an examination of tolls levied by the separate States, should such tolls be required, as will prevent the perversion of this taxing privilege into a scheme for favoring one State or locality at the expense of another. Nevertheless, the latter proposal is a sensibly conservative one, in thorough accord with the customs and usages of English-speaking people, while the existing law is a step towards Socialism blindly made by men who have refused to carefully examine this important question.

WILL TAXING COAL LANDS INCREASE THE PRICE OF COAL?—The Age of Steel, published at St. Louis, says that the decision of the Illinois Supreme Court declaring that coal beneath the surface in that State is liable to taxation, will relieve the burden of taxation on Illinois farmers, but that "a large proportion of the tax will, of course, come out of the manufacturing interests of St. Louis, Chicago, Joliet and other industrial centres using Illinois coal." How does the Age of Steel figure that out? Are the coal miners of Illinois not now charging these manufacturing centres all that they can get? Would they not charge more now if they would not thereby drive their present customers to other sources of supply? How are they, then, going to obtain more from the manufacturers because they must henceforth pay taxes on their coal lands?

We will venture a prediction for the benefit of our St. Louis contemporary. If the tax imposed on coal lands in Illinois has any traceable effect on the price of coal, it will cause the price to fall rather than to rise. At present there is a great extent of coal land unworked in Illinois. The ability to hold it out of use enables mine owners to limit the supply of coal, to some extent. The tendency of a tax on such land is to make it less profitable to hold it out of use. The higher the tax goes, the greater this tendency. The owners will therefore have an inducement to work mines at least enough to enable them to obtain sufficient coal to pay the taxes. This will put more coal on the market and tend toward lowering the price. Let the Age of Steel watch the market and see if it is not mistaken in supposing that taxing coal lands will increase the price of coal.

A PRACTICAL EXAMPLE.—In Bridgeport, Conn., there is a man named Sanford who, until recently, owned a corner lot near the Court House. It was one of these object lesson lots that Single Tax men like to refer to in their speeches—a vacant, unimproved piece of land in the heart of the city. Mr. Sanford was offered for this property $75,000 about a year or so ago, but would not sell it. It is customary there for property owners to place a valuation on their property to aid the tax assessors in their work. At the last assessment Mr. Sanford thought he would be aiding the assessors by valuing the lot referred to at $3,000. But this time his valuation was not accepted. The assessors had heard of the $75,000 offer. They mentioned the fact to Mr. Sanford, and told him that, as he had refused $75,000, the lot must be worth $60,000, and they would therefore assess it at the customary one-third of its undoubted value, which would be $20,000. And so they did. Whereupon, what did Mr. Sanford do? Within a month from the time when the assessment was levied he started the foundations of a big building.

Mr. W. J. Gorsuch, of Bridgeport, who tells this story, says that he has lost, by the disappearance of this vacant lot, a prominent example of the evils of the present system—an example he had often used in his speeches; but he thinks he has gained a very good example of the good effects of applying the entering wedge of the Single Tax.

Mr. Gorsuch has gained more than he has lost. It is not hard to find plenty of land held vacant because the assessments are so low that a man can make more, all things considered, by holding them for an increase in value than he can by improving them. It is not hard to find whole districts whose growth and industry has been paralyzed by the withholding of land from use. What we need is more of the other examples. What is wanted is a movement that shall force the assessors to value vacant unimproved land at something like its true value. This is one of the most practical and practicable first steps in the direction of the Single Tax. Its good effects will be seen and felt immediately, as in the case of Mr. Sanford; and, once seen, it will not need much argument to show the people what will be the effect of applying the Single Tax in its fullness.

HOW TO GIVE LABOR ITS FULL EARNINGS.

Mr. J. H. Walrath, of Milwaukee, Wis., does not understand how society can take by taxation part of the wealth created by labor, and yet leave to each man his full earnings. He writes as follows:

The Single Tax platform declares "that each man is entitled to all that his labor produces;" also, that the Single Tax would "solve the labor problem and raise wages in all occupations to the full earnings of labor."

Now, under the present system of private ownership of land, does not labor produce not only the wages paid to labor, but also interest realized for use of capital, profits to employers of labor, rents paid to landlords on land and the buildings thereon, and also all the taxes collected for the support of all Governments, whether economically or extravagantly administered?

On page 49 of "Progress and Poverty" Mr. George quotes Adam Smith as follows:

"The produce of labor constitutes the natural recompense or wages of labor. In that original state of things which precedes both appropriation of land and the accumulation of stock, the whole produce of labor belongs to labor." And on page 156 Mr. George says: "Where land is free and labor is unassisted by capital, the whole produce will go to labor;" and on page 125 he formulates the produce problem thus: "Produce=Rent+wages+interest."

Now, under the Single Tax system the revenues for the support of Government will be realized from land rents, but will it not be true then, as now, that such rents will be included in the total production of labor? And if so, then how can the adoption of the Single Tax result in giving "to each man all that his labor produces" and "raise wages to the full earnings of labor," as indicated in the platform?

All produce is divided into three parts-rent, wages and interest. It is a confusion of terms to speak of a further division into profits, or two kinds of rent. Profits is a term meaning partly wages of superintendence, partly interest. Rent is the payment for the use of land only; payment for the use of a house, as distinguished from the land it stands on, is interest, not rent, for a rented house is capital, it is wealth in course of exchange. As for taxes, they are drawn from either rent, wages or interest. The primary division of the entire product, therefore, is always into these three parts, rent going to the landowner, wages to the laborer, interest to the capitalist.

Interest, the reward of capital, is earned by capital, capital being labor stored up in the form of wealth, and used in producing more wealth. Interest, therefore, is not drawn from the earnings of labor and does not reduce wages.

Economic rent is that part of the total product which represents the increased power with which the community, as a whole, aids the individual. Land bears no rent until the presence of population, the growth and improvement of the whole community, have made some locations more valuable and productive than the best locations which can be had free. By guaranteeing to certain individuals the exclusive possession of locations which it has rendered valuable, society increases their product. The excess of their product over that which the same application can secure from the least productive land in use is rent. As it is not the result of extra application of either labor or capital, rent is not part of the earnings of individuals. Therefore, taking rent for public purposes will not decrease wages. But the effect of leaving rent in the hands of individuals is to greatly decrease wages as well as interest, and the total product of the community. This results, first, from the fact that the private ownership of rent causes the speculative monopolization of land; and second, from the fact that society, not receiving the rent which it creates, is compelled to levy taxes on production and products of industry, which eventually are drawn almost entirely from the earnings of labor.

Wages and interest are fixed and would be fixed under the Single Tax as well as now, by the rent line or margin of cultivation; that is to say, they are fixed by the reward which labor and capital can secure on the best land which bears no rent. Or, to put it more clearly, the average rate of wages of skilled labor is determined by the wages of unskilled labor; and the wages of unskilled labor are determined by what such labor could produce by employing itself on the best land that can be had free of rent; the general rate of interest being determined in the same way. The reason why wages, at the primary distribution of products, are not the full earnings of the individual to-day, is because the margin of cultivation is artificially lowered. The desire on the part of all men to hold all the land they can get, using to its full extent only a mere fraction of it, creates a speculative monopolization of land and lowers the margin of cultivation far below what it would naturally be if speculation in land were destroyed by the Single Tax. Hence, rents are artificially increased and wages and interest lowered, wages and interest being now fixed by what can be produced on the best unappropriated land, instead of being fixed by what could be produced on the best unused land, which is where the margin of cultivation naturally should be.

As long as land speculation exists the value of land increases in a greater ratio than productive power, rent takes more than the increase, and wages and interest fall. Under the Single Tax, where land speculation was destroyed, the value of land would follow after the increase of productive power, not run on ahead of it, and while rent would increase so also would wages and interest.

To raise wages to the full earnings of labor, then, we must destroy speculation in land and raise the margin of cultivation to the level of the best unused land; and, in order to leave to the individual his full earnings, we must abolish all the taxes on the products of labor, which are paid out of wages in increased prices. All this we can do by taking rent for public purposes by means of a Single Tax, levied on all land, improved or unimproved, according to its value.

The effect would be, moreover, not merely to raise wages to the full earnings of labor, but to make these earnings enormously greater than at present. With production freed from every trammel, natural opportunities open to all; all the members of the community engaged in productive work—none living on rents as at present, the product both of society as a whole and of each individual would be the result of the most improved methods employed under the freest conditions. Rent, wages and interest would all be increased; and rent being distributed in public benefits equally among all the members of society, every man would receive far more than his individual earnings.

HENRY GEORGE IN BERMUDA.

BERMUDA, February 3.—These islands are so dark because nobody lives on them?

"Why don't they live on them?"

"The British Government won't sell them for fear Americans will buy up all the islands in time."

"What a great chance to rent out the islands on their annual value," spoke up the only Single Taxer present.

"That's the Henry George idea," was the contemptuously thrown-back answer.

This dialogue took place on board the tender that was conveying the passengers from the steamer Trinidad to Hamilton, capital of the Bermudas. It was Sunday evening, February 1. The sun had gone down while the baggage was being examined on the steamer, and it was dark except for the long lingering pink of sunset. As the little boat glided swiftly over the water great gaunt islands lifted their heads to right and left. The passengers were all in darkness and no face could be distinguished from its fellow.

As the words of the last speaker broke the stillness a voice came out of the gloom. The pilot swung his lantern just then and its rays fell upon a gray-haired distinguished looking man, a Bermudian, who was saying: "Henry George? Do you know him?"

"Oh, yes," said one of the dialogists; "he left the States a physical wreck a few days ago, at least the New York Sun said so."

"That can't be true," said the serious gentleman. "The Sun might have made the statement from malice. Do you think so?"

"There are a few in New York who think the Sun might do such a thing," said the third party to the conversation.

"Must have been, must have been," went on the elderly gentleman, "for just this afternoon I met a man in a big broad-brimmed straw hat on our principal street. He asked me for some information about the place. I didn't know till later it was Henry George. A wreck, you say? Ha, ha! Why, I was only wishing as he walked away that I was looking half as healthy."

Then all fell to watching the lights of Hamilton come twinkling into sight. It had been a splendid run from New York. Leaving there Friday morning in a cold fog, in twenty-four hours the steamer was in the Gulf stream, and with every mile the skies grew softer and the winds milder. The splendid staterooms of the steamer were largely utilized by the passengers, for though the sea was comparatively calm all the way down, the choppy waves provoked seasickness.

When the steamer came to anchor outside the coral reefs runners for the hotels swarmed over the edge of the vessel from the tender. They were all colored: in fact, nearly all the seamanship hereabouts seems to be in the hands of the colored people, from the big, impertinent-looking pilot who takes the barge steamer through the dangerous reefs to the captains of the little sailing craft that dart from island to island bearing passengers or freight. The runners keep up a steady fire of exaggerated praise of their respective hotels until the passengers climb into the tender, followed by the loud-voiced runners. The town lights coming into view and faint odors of a waiting supper inspire the runners to repeated outbursts of hyperbole. They stand away off at the bow of the boat. Their utterance is possibly more musical than that of the Southern negro, for, following the English accent of the island, they give each letter "a" the rich Italian sound. Floating back to the rear, mingled with the swish of the cutwater and the lapping of the ripples on the sides of the boat, their calls have a singularly melodious effect, as they advise the passengers to "go to the Princess Hotel, the palace by the sea," or to the "Hamilton, the palace on the hill, where you pick stabs with one hand and flowahs with the othah."

There is a grating of the boat against stone steps, somebody calls "Princess Hotel," and there is a scramble up the flags. Half way up a familiar voice calls out: "Hello! You came down after all, eh?" and Henry George is seen standing in the waiting crowd.

The man who had quoted the Sun was dragged forward till he saw Mr. George. Then he sneaked off for supper. After the meal he said: "If Mr. George's face when he left New York was 'shrunken, his countenance pallid and his step dubious,' he ought to get a position on the stage as a lightning change artist, for he certainly looks the picture of physical strength to-night. If I had the color and the springiness of movement he has, I'd go back to the States by the return steamer."

This will give an idea of how Mr. George is looking. The next day he took me out in a sail-boat for a long sail down among the islands of the Bay of Hamilton. A big freight boat came dashing across our bows. "Luff! luff!" called Mr. George, as he held the tiller in one hand and the sail rope in the other. The other skipper shook his head and showed his white teeth, as much as to say: "Come on, hain't I got the biggest boat?" A quick turn of the rudder, a sharp haul in of the sheet, and we pulled up, just in time to let the stranger scrape our bows as he flew by at a ten-mile clip.

As we scudded on again before the stiff wind Mr. George took off his skull-cap, laughed, and said: "That was a close one, wasn't it? I tell you, this air and sea are splendid. Why, this is only my eighth day here, and I feel as if I had been here a month."

The Princess Hotel, where Mr. and Mrs. George and Mr. and Mrs. Simon Mendelson are staying, is the best situated in the town. It is on the water's edge and is built of wood which insures dryness. You can dive off the porch into twelve feet of water. As Mr. George eats he can see the sails of his boat almost brushing the windows of the dining room. His sleeping room is almost directly over the water, which, splashing against the rocks, sooths one to slumber. Their voyage down was so pleasant that even Mrs. George does not rebel at the proximity of her enemy, the sea.

The Bermuda Islands—variously called the Bermudas or simply Bermuda—lie seven hundred miles southeast of New York. They have a population of 14,650, of whom fully sixty per cent. are colored, sprung from the old colonial day slave stock. Some of the dusky natives have American Indian blood, being descendants of Indian prisoners taken in the Pequot and King Philip's wars. The negroes claim to be in a better condition here than anywhere else in the world. Certainly we have seen no beggars, and the cottages of even the poorest are adapted to the slight needs of the climate. There are no tumbledown shanties here. The houses of the rich and the poor alike are built of the same material—a whitish stone of coral formation which underlies every foot of soil on the islands. When first quarried it is so soft, it is cut up into blocks with a hand-saw, for it cuts easier than wood. It hardens when exposed to the air, and is so durable that a house built of it will last for centuries. The stone when exposed to the air takes on a dark color in a few years. This accounts for the whitewashing all the houses, from highest to lowest, receive. Some visitors get away, however, without detecting the presence of whitewash, some of the most observant, too.

"That's a good one on Mark Twain," broke in Mr. George, yesterday, as we were rowing about among the coves. "He tells in his book on the Bermudas about the pure white stone houses and never says a word about whitewash. Guess he must have worn white clothes all the time he was here. I didn't expect that of Mark, for if you remember, Tom Sawyer was an expert in whitewash."

As we paddled along we had our coats off, and it was getting late in the afternoon too. The winds from the Gulf Stream have a temperature that averages about seventy degrees. Of course, light Summer clothes are worn and windows are everywhere left wide open, all night long. You are awakened in the morning by the singing of birds and the rustle of the big broad-leaved trees of palm, banana, orange, lemon, paw-paw. The spotlessly white houses gleaming through the thick foliage give a picturesqueness to the landscape that is not equalled anywhere else in the world, especially in view of the contrast with the waters of the bay, which take on a blue as deep as that of the Swiss lakes.

Yet in spite of the luxuriant growth and the great success everywhere possible with fruit raising, the principal agricultural products are onions and Irish potatoes, the chief market being New York. The thousand and one little valleys would raise tons of bananas, oranges, plantains, lemons, figs, shaddocks, pineapples and other tropical fruits and vegetables that could be easily consumed by the visitors, for whom now there is nothing like enough of a local supply of fruit. Agriculture used to be a leading pursuit at Bermuda, but it has given way to ship building and salt manufacture. The colored population live by —

"If you're coming down to St. George's you had better climb aboard," comes up a voice from the boat landing. It is Mr. George.

Down below Mrs. George is just putting up her parasol, and the rest of the party are taking seats. St. George's is at the other end of the island, the headquarters of the troops, for these islands are heavily garrisoned. It means a ten mile sail down, so I put away pencil and paper.

WILLIAM E. HICKS.

SENATOR PEFFER'S "WAY OUT."

TOPEKA, Kansas, February 4.—I closed my last letter by an allusion to Senator-elect Peffer's pamphlet called "The Way Out," which is now jocularly alluded to as "Peffer's Way In." The pamphlet outlines a scheme for establishing "a perfect financial system," destroying "the influence of the money power," preventing panics and supplying "the people with money direct from the Government, without the intervention of banks, at 1 per cent. on long time loans, and at 2 to 3 per cent. on short time loans." It is also a scheme "to lift the present burden of indebtedness from the people" and "to equalize profits and emancipate labor." The intellectual qualities which the Senator-elect lends to the development of his scheme may be inferred from the introduction, in which he divides Labor into two great departments, "one employed in producing property, the other in handling it;" the former consisting of farmers, mechanics and the like, the latter of merchants, carriers, etc.; the former being producers, while the latter are non-producers. His object in classifying workers as producers and non-producers is to distinguish between those whose profit depends upon the value of commodities, and those whose "profit does not depend on that." After such an analysis of Labor, thoughtful readers are prepared for the mathematically exact proposition that "to call in one-half the money of the country would not only increase interest rates 50 percent, but it would force prices of commodities down 50 per cent.!" And business men should not be surprised to learn that "profits on the use of money are far in excess of profits on other kinds of property." They ought to apply slanderous epithets to themselves for locking their money up in dry goods and real estate instead of lending it.

The primary object of the Peffer scheme is to obtain money from Government for all borrowers at a low rate of interest. To accomplish this Mr. Peffer proposes to issue legal tenders in value equal to all the national bank notes retired from 1882 to 1889, amounting to $227,000,000; to issue the gold redemption fund of $100,000,000; to put out all the surplus in banks and the Treasury, amounting to $85,000,000; and to coin annually say $88,000,000 of gold and silver. He believes it will be necessary to issue more than $500,000,000 in time, but thinks this will be enough to begin with.

This fund is to be distributed to the people in four ways. Part of it is to go out in payment for public services, part in payment for property taken for public use, and part in payment of debts, the inference being that Federal taxation will shortly be to that extent reduced. But the principal mode of distribution is by lending, and this is to be done by "two sorts of loans," to accommodate two classes of borrowers, namely, (1) borrowers for short periods and upon personal security; and, (2) borrowers for long periods upon real estate security. For the former banks are to be established and for the latter loan agencies.

The banks are to be private institutions having power to issue money upon the security of coin, bullion, coin and bullion certificates and treasury notes, instead of bonds. This, it is argued, would prevent the cornering of money, because the banks could not surrender their own circulation without releasing Government money. Bank loans would be limited to three months in time and in interest to 2 per cent. per annum, which would enable farmers and others to keep their products out of glutted markets, by storing and borrowing of banks at low rates on the security of warehouse receipts.

The loan agencies would be Government institutions. A central loan bureau would be part of the Treasury Department under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, and at each State Capitol a subordinate central agency would be established, while local agencies would be stationed at convenient points. It would be the business of these agencies "to lend money to the people on real estate security" for not less than one year nor longer than eleven. At least 9 per cent. of the principal must be paid off annually, and interest is to be at the rate 1 per cent., payable annually, which is to include all charges except preliminary expenses. For the first two years loans are to be made only for the purpose of lifting existing indebtedness secured by mortgages on homes where foreclosure proceedings are imminent. After the first two years applications are to be considered in their order. To show the operation of this part of Mr. Peffer's scheme, I quote an hypothetical case from his pamphlet.

"Say, Mr. A. is indebted $1,000 at 10 per cent. annual interest, and his home is mortgaged to secure payment. As things now are, he can pay no more than the interest as it falls due—that is, $100 a year. At the end of eleven years (supposing present conditions to continue) he would have paid eleven times $100, or $1,100, a sum equal to the amount of his debt and $100 more, but the debt would not be paid—not a dollar of it; he would still owe the original $1,000. Now follow the plan proposed in 'The Way Out': Mr. A borrows $1,000 from the Government at 1 per cent. annual charge, promising to pay 9 per cent. of the principal every year for ten years, and the balance at the end of the eleventh year. That would be just $100 a year ($10 interest, $90 principal). This amount ($100) is all interest, under the old 10 per cent. system: 90 per cent. of it is principal under the system proposed. At the end of ten years under the new rule, $900 of the principal would be paid, leaving only $100, with the interest, 10 per cent., to be paid at the end of the eleventh year, when the debt would be all paid and the aggregate amount of all the eleven yearly payments, principal and interest, would be $1,100, or only $10 more than the interest only by the old rule."

The economist who regards interest as merely an incident of the money-lending relation may find it difficult to explain consistently why this scheme would not relieve the debtor without prejudice to the creditor and be at all times an open sesame to the caves of wealth. But when interest is recognized as an incident of trade attaching to labor products irrespective of money and irrespective of borrowing and lending. Mr. Peffer's fallacy is exposed. Instead of reckoning merely with dollars at 10 per cent., let us reckon with sheep producing an increase of 10 per cent. (over and above wages) on the best land to be had without rent, and consider dollars only as representatives. It will then readily appear that though Mr. Peffer's scheme would confer a great advantage upon existing debtors as such, producers, as such, would derive no benefits except those of free trade that might flow from a larger volume of currency.

It is undeniable that this pamphlet of the Senator-elect has made a profound impression upon the farmers of Kansas. Most of them are heavily mortgaged, paying interest ranging from 10 per cent. upward, and so simple a plan of getting out of debt is exceedingly attractive. Senator Peffer will undoubtedly take steps to embody it in an Act of Congress, and it will be well for Democrats of the East to consider that until this or some better plan of settling the money question is taken up, that question will be a disturbing element in the politics of the West.

In the defeat of Senator Ingalls there is ample cause for rejoicing. In the election of Senator Peffer, perhaps not so much. He is not a strong man, nor a clear thinking man. Though a student, he is only bookish. But he is not a Protectionist, such as he once was. Believing still in the principle of Protection, he is not willing to pay a high price for it, and favors the reduction of the Tariff to an average of 20 per cent. And as to necessities, he already believes in Free Trade, with a decided disposition to become an absolute Free Trader. He is a man of sterling honesty, respected as such wherever he is known, and his change of political views, even though a Senatorship was his reward, has not excited the slightest suspicion that either hope or expectation of reward in any degree influenced the change.

For once in the history of Kansas, a United States Senator has been elected without the aid of money. For once, a Kansas Legislature has risen superior to corruption.

LOUIS F. POST.

ENGLISH QUESTIONS COMING TO THE FORE.

HYDE, MANCHESTER, England. January 24.—The recent election at Hartlepool, though a Liberal victory, did not turn on the question of Home Rule. The real truth, I believe, is, that the working-men of the constituency voted with very little regard to that issue, and with very much regard to English social questions. The Liberal candidate was a very moderate Home Ruler, and he made little of that question in his canvass. On the other hand, he declared that he was a warm supporter of trades unionism, pledged himself to employ none but union labor, and advocated many drastic reforms closely affecting the well-being of the working classes. In private, the Liberal members and candidates freely admit that this is the only way to win seats: but they tell you that they cannot act very generally on that conviction, because Mr. Gladstone is determined not to do anything but deal with Ireland.

In a great variety of ways, however, these other questions with which Mr. Gladstone declines to deal are coming more and more into prominence, and it is quite certain that whatever Mr. Gladstone's wishes may be, the next general election will be fought much more upon English than upon Irish questions, though the Irish question will undoubtedly be that upon which the candidates will expend most eloquence.

The proceedings of the London County Council are of the very first importance in this country, not even excepting the House of Commons itself. I am not here making any merely rash or ill-considered statement, as I will explain. Power, in England, is very rapidly, indeed, passing from the privileged classes to the unprivileged people, and Parliament is giving expression to this fact by delegating more and more of its functions to local representative bodies. There can be no doubt that what is called State Socialism is making very great headway: and these local representative bodies, such as the London County Council, will ere long be called upon to do things which would have horrified the political economists of twenty years ago, and which even now fill many of the comfortable classes with alarm. As I have more than once mentioned, the London County Council at present has a Progressive majority, one of the guiding spirits of which is our friend Mr. William Saunders. The Council has done a good deal in the direction of arousing public interest in the question of ground rents and land values generally. It has now to face the question of the public water supply, and here again it will attack land monopoly; it is face to face with the question of the housing of the working classes, and here once more, of course, it has to meet the old enemy—land monopoly. Monopoly in the interest of the private individual, in all its multifarious forms, is being dealt with by the London County Council, and the example of this body is being largely followed by other similar bodies. The various councils, both in towns and rural districts, have had a very large sum of money placed at their disposal by the Government. The money was intended for the purchase of public-houses. It was the endowment of the brewers, but was diverted from that object because the Government had to abandon their Licensing bill last year. Now, in a vast number of instances, the money is going to be devoted to technical education, and almost every local representative body of any importance in the country will, in a very short time, be irretrievably committed to a great scheme of education, the beginning of which may look simple enough, but the end of which most thoughtful persons believe will be aught but simple.

Another question of great importance, which is being dealt with by the London Council, is the incidence of rating. The ways in which the privileged classes plunder the unprivileged in this country are only less marvelous than the impudence and impunity with which the robberies are effected. Wherever you find the rich people living, there you find property assessed greatly below its value. The London County Council have gone very carefully into this, and they have decided by a swinging majority to appeal against the assessments of certain wealthy quarters of London. In the case of the parish of St. George, Hanover square, 2,948 separate properties were under-assessed, and the assessment of the parish ought to be increased by £235,097 gross and £198,059 ratable. In Holborn the assessments should be increased by about £31,800 ratable, in Marylebone by about £82,000, in Lambeth by £27,037. The prospect is that this process will go on from town to town and from county to county.

Another phase of the same process is seen in the tendency, more and more strongly marked every year, and this year, aided by the extreme severity of the Winter, more marked than ever, to look to the local authorities to provide work for the unemployed. All over England we have had the bitterest cry that ever yet was heard since the terrible times preceding the repeal of the Corn Laws. Men, women and children have been crying for bread. In Ireland the very Government has constituted itself a charity organization, and there is not a farm of any size throughout Great Britain but has been compelled to take some special steps to deal with distress.

But the most significant step which has been taken for some time is that which was taken last night in the House of Commons. The great railway strike in Scotland has given rise to a strong feeling that the Government ought to interfere. Much disturbance of trade, and what appears to be considered of somewhat less importance, considerable danger to life, has been experienced, and last night a motion was made in the House to the effect that in the opinion of this House the excessive hours of labor imposed on railway servants by the existing arrangements of the railway companies of the United Kingdom constitute a grave social injustice and are a constant source of danger both to the men themselves and to the traveling public, and that it is expedient that the Board of Trade should obtain powers by legislation to issue orders, where necessary, directing railway companies to limit the hours of work of special classes of their servants, or to make such a reasonable increase in any class of their servants as will obviate the necessity for overtime work.

A very interesting debate ensued, in the course of which Sir Stafford Northcote declared that if the Government met the motion with a direct negative he should, though a tolerably strong supporter of the Government, vote for the motion. Deferring to the strong feeling thus plainly shown, Sir Michael Hicks Beach, on the part of the Government, offered, if the motion were withdrawn, to move in its place, the following:

That in the opinion of this House the employment of railway servants for excessive hours is a source of danger both to the men themselves and to the traveling public, and that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire whether, and if so in what way, the hours worked by railway servants should be restricted by legislation.

Sir William Harcourt recommended the House to proceed with the original motion, and the result was that the Government narrowly escaped defeat. The net result is that both parties in the House are more or less committed to legislative interference with the railways.

And this is the kind of thing that is going on every day. We are perhaps slowly but certainly very surely working in the direction of a social system which will greatly, and I believe fundamentally, differ from the present. The tendency is clearly enough seen by many who are very well off under the existing order of things, and very ingenious are the devices to which they resort to check it. But the air is heavy with a new ideal, and it is the ideal proclaimed eighteen centuries ago, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and its power is irresistible.

FABLE OF THE TWO SHIP OWNERS.

A selfish man who lived near the sea and had land and workshops and several ships, got a conceit that he should become much richer and happier if he were to supply all his wants from his own land and his own shops, and were to sell to other people as many goods as possible, but utterly refuse to buy from them anything whatever. So he sent his ships away laden and made them sail home empty.

Another man—a live and let live sort of a fellow (who also dwelt near the sea and had land and workshops and several ships)—believed that he should get richer and happier by supplying his wants from the lands and shops of the whole world; which could easily be done by selling to other people whatever he had too much of and did not want, and by buying whatever he had not enough of or had not at all. He believed that thus, besides other advantages, he could save himself from doing, at great cost, much work that other people would be glad to do for him at less cost. So this man made his ships busy with loads both ways.

The consequence was that in the end the selfish man had no ships at all, and, contrary to his expectations, got very poor and miserable, while the other man had all the ships that sailed the seas and became very rich and very happy.

Moral.—Do not suppose that nothing is wealth but money, and that you can prosper and be happy by doing everything for yourself and doing nothing for others.

HOW YOUNG WOMEN ARE TREATED AND HOW THEY SHOULD BE TREATED.

Miss Alice S. Woodbridge, secretary of the Workingwomen's Society, of No. 27 Clinton place, has recently been making a personal examination into the condition of the saleswomen in this city. She told a reporter of the Commercial Advertiser that she had been astounded at the discoveries she made. "Men's wages are low," said Miss Woodbridge, sadly, "but it seems that they cannot fall below the point where existence is possible. Women's wages, however, have no low limit, since the paths of shame are always open to her. Women have been forced by their necessities to take the places of men in our dry goods stores at an average salary of four dollars a week, while the children employed as 'cash' girls do not average two dollars. For these wages they have to work ten hours a day at least: on Saturdays four or five hours longer; while it is no unusual thing for them to be kept from fifteen minutes to four hours nightly 'arranging stock.' The sanitary arrangements in nearly all the stores are wretched. There being insufficient light and air—while the toilet arrangements were simply horrible and called for the attention of the Board of Health, who have so far given the matter no attention. They were also degrading." Says Miss Woodbridge:

In the manufacturing department of one of our largest stores the closets for males and females stand side by side, and are not sufficiently separated for common decency; only a thin board partition, not reaching to the ceiling, separating them. Many men are employed, and the same wash-basin and towel has to serve for all. On visiting the store I was struck by the fact that a large number of children were suffering from granulated eye-lids. As this disease is contagious it is easy to see how it could spread from that towel. Moreover, women and children have to make personal applications to the floor-walkers for the keys of the toilet rooms. The general condition in the stores of the city may be judged from the fact that one of the saleswomen told me that the toilet room in this particular store was better than she had seen in any store where she had been hitherto employed.

Miss Woodbridge found that it was a common thing for children under the legal age to be employed in these stores, and at labor beyond their strength. Faithful service meets with no reward. After four or five years discharge is certain, because the employers fear that employees may get an idea that they have a claim on the firm and may ask for an advance of salary. "I know," says Miss Woodbridge, "of instances where women have been discharged for no other reason than this—the firm stating that they did not like to have women too long in their employ. A double injury is done to these discharged women, for it is almost impossible for them to obtain employment in other houses."

After speaking of other matters, such as fines, the ignoring of the law which requires that seats shall be furnished for saleswomen, etc., Miss Woodbridge says:

In conclusion, let me say that through low wages, long hours, unwholesome sanitary conditions and the discouraging results of excessive fines, not only the physical condition of the women is injured, but the tendency is to injure the moral being as well. It is simply impossible for any woman to live, without assistance, on the low salary a saleswoman earns, without depriving herself of real necessities. It is certainly a most difficult matter to deal with from the fact that the character of the pure and upright, who form the vast majority of the women, might be injured; and also from the fact of offending the sense of delicacy and good taste of the public. But there is a necessity for facing the question. In Paris it is an understood thing that women who are employed in shops cannot exist without assistance from other questionable sources, and unless something is done at once that must also become the case in our land, where we pride ourselves on our respect for honest toil.

It happens that at the time Miss Woodbridge was making the investigation spoken of above, Peterson's Magazine, of Philadelphia, appeared with an article on the "Care of Young Girls," from which I select as follows, to show the careful treatment that is necessary to maintain the health of young women between the ages of twelve to sixteen, in order that they may be properly fitted for the duties devolving upon them later in life. It will be seen that the ages in which the most care must be taken are the ages during which the young women are most apt to be working in the stores under the system against which Miss Woodbridge so loudly complains. Peterson's Magazine says:

The years from twelve to sixteen are perhaps the most important in a girl's physical history. She is passing from childhood into a more mature stage, and mind and body are both taxed to the utmost to meet the demands upon them. She needs wise and tender care at this time, help to understand the new problems that are forcing themselves upon her, and to be surrounded with the best hygienic conditions to secure an adequate physical development. If a child has been properly dressed and fed had a sufficiency of exercise, plenty of fresh air and an ample allowance of sleep, she reaches this critical age well prepared for the strain she is to encounter. If, on the other hand, no care has been exercised in these important matters, they should at once be carefully attended to, in order to remedy, as far as possible, the ill effects of past neglect. It is much easier to preserve health than to restore it when it is lost. To do this it is not necessary to hedge a girl around with a number of tiresome restrictions that fret and worry.

Peterson's Magazine then goes on to say that plain food and plenty of it, properly cooked and continually varied, is absolutely necessary, among the articles enumerated being the following: Light, flaky, well-baked pie crust in pastry; candy occasionally; light, sweet bread and butter; hot or cold milk or cocoa, and all the cereals; fresh meat, poultry, good soups, vegetables and fruit. Between the ages of twelve and sixteen rest is as essential to the girl as food. She should have at least ten hours' sleep at night and a nap between times. When the girl gets up in the morning she should be given a quick sponge bath and a brisk rubbing of the whole body. She should not be allowed to worry, nor to become excited. When a girl is tired she should be immediately allowed to lie down and rest. "The sofa and an interesting book will do her good; after that she should be in the open air." "Pure air is absolutely essential to a growing girl—as necessary as light and air are to a plant, and her parents should see to it that fresh air is admitted to the bedroom, where the whole of the night is spent."

"Fortunately," says Peterson's Magazine, "out-door games and occupations are the fashion for girls now-a-days. Tennis and all kindred amusements bring them health and pleasure at the same time." At certain periods, of course, the out-door amusements must be dispensed with and the utmost quiet maintained. The matter of dress is considered as of the utmost importance, and Peterson's Magazine speaks of it at some length. Having complied with all the conditions detailed above, the magazine says the result will be a perfect being who will be fully able, when the time comes, to assume the functions of motherhood in all that sacred term implies.

Here we have the opinion of a widely-read family journal as to what is actually necessary to be done in order that the mothers of the future shall be properly fitted for their life work, and here also we have the story of Miss Woodbridge, showing how in the struggle for bread every precaution suggested has to be cast aside.

Notice the contrasts between what should be and what is done:

"In the years from twelve to sixteen * * * a girl needs wise and tender care." "Through low wages, long hours, unwholesome sanitary conditions * * * the condition of the woman is injured, and the tendency is to injure the moral being as well."

"She must be surrounded with the best hygienic conditions to secure an adequate physical development." "In the manufacturing departments of our largest stores the closets for males and females stand side by side, and are not sufficiently separated for common decency. * * * Many men are employed, and the same wash-basin and towel has to serve for all."

"Light, flaky, well-baked pie crust in pastry; candy occasionally; light, sweet bread and butter, milk, cocoa, eggs, all the cereals, fresh meat, poultry, good soups, vegetables and fruit." "Women have been forced by their necessities * * * to work for less than four dollars a week."

"Between the ages of twelve and sixteen rest is as essential as food. The girl should have at least ten hours sleep at night, and a nap between times. * * * In the morning she should be given a quick sponge bath and a brisk rubbing of the whole body." "For these wages the young women have to work from ten to fifteen hours a day."

"When a girl is tired she should be immediately allowed to lie down and rest." "The girls are not allowed to sit down during working hours."

"Pure air is absolutely essential to a growing girl." "Day after day girls are carried fainting from their work."

And so on, and so on.

Miss Woodbridge says there is a "necessity for facing the question." She is right! The sooner the better!

EQUALIZING ASSESSMENTS.

I was very much interested in Mr. Shriver's article in THE STANDARD of January 21, proposing a method of preventing under-assessment of property by local assessors, and of making each district pay its just proportionate share of State taxation. This matter has long been a subject of thought with me, and in fact I had a brief letter on the subject in THE STANDARD some two years ago, describing a plan which I think will solve the whole difficulty. Of course, if we raise National as well as State taxes by direct taxation, the difficulty will be complicated, for not only will some districts escape their fair proportion of State taxes, but some States will escape their fair proportion of Federal taxes, unless under-assessment is prevented.

My plan is as follows: First, in the case of the National revenues, supposing them to be raised by direct taxation. To secure a just proportion from each State, we must require that taxes be assessed among the States in proportion to their representation in Congress, instead of according to their population, as now; or rather we must base the representation of a State on its taxation. The total representation will then be fixed by a ratio between population and taxation.

We can do this by a very simple method, which will tend to prevent under-valuation, and at the same time avoid any discrimination between States where wealth and population are in varying proportions—Texas and New York, for example. Thus: Divide the aggregate valuation of the United States by the total population to arrive at the per capita valuation. Now divide the valuation of each State by this per capita amount, and the quotient will be the population to be represented. To illustrate, let us assume the population of the United States to be 60,000,000, and the total assessed valuation $30,000,000,000. Then $30,000,000,000 divided by 60,000,000 gives $500, the per capita amount. Now, assume the valuation of Illinois to be $1,500,000,000; divide this by the per capita amount, $500, and we have 3,000,000 as a basis of representation. This method would tend to correct assessments and prevent under-assessment, as the representation of a State would be based on its valuation for taxation.

Let us now apply the same method to the counties in a State. For this purpose I will take the figures given by the census of 1880, for the State of Illinois. The aggregate State valuation was $600,000,000; population, 3,000,000. Dividing the former by the latter, we have a per capita amount of $200. The valuation of Morgan County was $9,000,000. Dividing by 200, we have 45,000 as the population to be represented in the Legislature. This shows a proportionate over-valuation in that county, for the actual population at that date was 31,514. Cook County had a valuation of $150,000,000. Dividing by 200, we have a quotient of 750,000 as the basis of representation, though the actual population was 607,524. This shows a proportionate over-valuation, as compared with the whole State, but an under-valuation as compared with Morgan County.

These examples show how the system would work, and how it would serve our purpose. When larger measures of local self-government are given, as in the future they should be, this system can as well be applied to precincts and townships in a county as to counties in a State, or to the States in the Union. It will be seen that it is as useful in correcting assessments under the present system as under the Single Tax. The idea is original with myself, and there may be objections that I have not been able to discern. I submit it to the readers of THE STANDARD for consideration and criticism.

PROGRESS!

What's a gem to fresh renters

When they need its worth in bread?

What are cars to dead inventors

When they jar their grassy bed?

While you gain a proud ascendance

O'er some sophistry effete,

Can you sever your dependence

On the man who sows the wheat?

Does some savant, fossils turning,

Rank the man who turns the sod?

Shall you in the hill of learning

Burrow out of sight of God?

Progress! Yes, in simple living:

Love that leaps from door to door;

Open lives and secret givings

For the cheering of the poor!

NOTES AND QUERIES.

The Typographical Journal, the organ of the International Typographical Union, has for some time past contained letters on "The Country Printer" and his relation to the union city printers. The discussion, up to the issue of February 2, had been, how to get "the country printers" into the International Union, so that they would not be a menace to the unions. A number of those who had contributed letters to the discussion considered that the menace could be easily removed by organizing "the country printers" in local unions of the trade, regardless of the fact that the whole energies of the international organization have been used in that direction for more than forty years. The latest letter on the subject comes from Topeka, Kansas, and the assertions contained in it are astonishing when one considers the large amount of work that has been done in "the work of organization." The Topeka writer shows by comparative tables that only one in about eight of the persons who make their living in the printing business are members of the printers' unions. He finds that in Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska there are 19,832 printers employed; yet only 1,782 are members of printers' unions—or about one in eleven. In the East it is not so bad, for out of 31,317 printers employed in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Massachusetts, 8,337 are members of the union—about one in four. "And yet," says the Topeka writer, "we boast of ours being the oldest trades union in the country!" "If," he continues, "in forty years we can muster only a skirmish line, how long will it take to get absolute control of the situation?" It is a gloomy showing, and forces upon us the conviction that the printers have been working on the wrong lines. It would seem that there is not sufficient in the trades union idea, of itself, to hold men together in these days of hard work and poor pay. A week's idleness means hunger to nine out of ten journeymen printers—and other artisans as well—not to speak of the large number to whom a day or two's idleness would mean no dinner or supper.

* * * * *

The fact is, we must take conditions as they are—a thing that trades unionists, as a rule, ignore—and look about us for a state of things, or a remedy, that will do away with the "menace" that threatens later generally. Among the most active members of the printers' unions of the country to-day are men who believe that the needed relief can be found in the Single Tax. That idea is steadily gaining ground among printers. A declaration from their international organization to that effect would hasten the day that will bring its realization. Let our Single Taxers continue to assist in all proposed organizations of unions: but let them keep in view the thing that will succeed when all other things have failed.

We have said that a declaration in favor of our principles by the International Union would advance our cause very materially. How can it be done? Under the new law of the union the election for delegates by the local unions will not be held until April. Let our Single Tax printers begin a canvass for delegateship now. Find out who our best advocates are, and when found begin electioneering for them immediately, so that when the time for nominating comes round public opinion will have been crystallized in favor of our friends. Then work diligently for the candidates. Success will be almost certain, and the declaration in favor of the Single Tax will follow.

The Buckeye Mower and Reaper Works at Akron, Ohio, have declined to make a readjustment of hours and wages with the result, so far as the workmen are concerned, that they will have to stand a cut ranging from thirty to sixty per cent., or else work longer hours in order to make the old wages. But the products of the company will cost the farmers just as much as before they reduced wages.

The news came from Pittsburg to-day that 15,000 coke workers were preparing to go on strike. The operators have demanded that the men accept a reduction of ten per cent. in their wages; the men, in their turn, demand an increase of twelve and a half per cent. over their wages of last year.

THE STANDARD told its readers some weeks ago of the fate that befell some French pauper-made dresses that had been seized by our ruthless customs officers while in transit to Mrs. Astor, on account of their being under valued. Their value was raised 2,000 francs by these officials, and Mrs. Astor appealed to the Appraising Board. This board has raised the valuation another 1,600 francs, and now Mrs. Astor is very angry. She says she won't stand the second raise. Rather than "see" it, she declares that she will let Uncle Sam keep the dresses, and wear them, if he wants to. Our Uncle wearing Mrs. Astor's dresses would appear ridiculous. He is not built that way. But still our Uncle cannot look more ridiculous than he does now in his role of parent of the protective tariff. As to Mrs. Astor, when she has sufficiently composed herself, she had better call a council of the men of her family, who are all Republican Protectionists, and talk over with them the beauties of our protective system.

The people interested in smelting of gold ore in Mexico are trying to secure from the Mexican government the enactment of an export duty on ores, so as to encourage domestic smelting by preventing the ores from being sent to the United States. This is all good protection policy; but the point worth noting is that these people who are asking for the duty are in part United States capitalists, who have invested their money in Mexican smelting furnaces. They are now trying to develop their Mexican interests at the expense of the smelting establishments of their own country.

The Dakota Building Company of Chicago is the owner of a building on the corner of State and Jackson streets, Chicago. They have a 99-year lease of the ground on which their building stands, paying $25,000 a year in ground rent. The capital stock of the company is $100,000. The building which they erected they have leased for ten years at a rent that nets the company $17,000 annually, or 17 per cent. on its capital. The lessees of the building finding that the site was growing rapidly in value, re-leased it at a rate that nets them $15,000 a year. If it were not bound by its ten years' lease to the first tenant the building company could thus be realizing $32,000 a year, or 32 per cent. on its capital. It would be interesting to know what the rent of that building will be after the ten years' lease expires, and what it will be at the end of the ninety-nine years' ground lease.

The City of New York now owns five-eighths of the water-front and derives a large revenue from the dock privileges. A case is mentioned where a dock which cost the city $100,000 paid annually over $30,000.

MONTICELLO, Ind., January 25.—With regard to an article in your last issue entitled "Taxing Foreign Capital," I would suggest that capital ceases to be capital when invested in land, whether directly (in the deed) or indirectly (in the mortgage). And "home rule" demands that the land should be taxed at home (in the county in which the said land is situated). Now when Indiana commences to tax her own land, it is but right that she ask her sister States to quit taxing the same. And I don't see how it could be construed as being a treaty if they should do so: or how it could be in any way unconstitutional. I am a member of the Farmers' Alliance, and I preach the Single Tax to my brethren, but I honestly believe that you should reconsider this question to see if you have not violated the principles of "Progress and Poverty." G. N. GALLOWAY.

If Mr. Galloway preaches the Single Tax understandingly he can show the people of Indiana that if they will abolish all the taxes that they levy, except a Single Tax on land values, that there would be no necessity for consulting with the people of other States on the subject. If the virtual owners of the land thus taxed found that other States also tried to tax them on Indiana land they would indignantly shake the dust of such States from their feet and move to Indiana or some other reasonably honest commonwealth. Whenever Indiana tries this system it can afford to laugh at any attempt by other States to rob it of any part of its natural revenue and devote itself to compelling the United States Government to cease robbing its people by means of tariff taxes.

Another law, even more Socialistic in its tendencies than the "Workingmen's Insurance Law," has been proposed by the Conservative and Catholic parties in the German Reichstag. According to this project, every German subject, on reaching the age of twenty-four, is to have the right to a homestead of sufficient size to supply the necessities of life required by a peasant's or workingman's family, including a dwelling house and all necessary outbuildings. The homestead cannot be pledged as security for debt, except in case of a failure of crops or for necessary improvements, or for portioning co-heirs, and then only by permission of the authorities, and to the extent of half the productive value, the repayments extending over a period depending on the particular case. A limit is fixed to the size of the homestead, which, on the other hand, cannot be divided. No person is entitled to more than one, and the homestead is inalienable, except with the consent of the holder's wife.

The Henry George Institute, of Glasgow, Scotland, has for its objects:

I. To spread the Principles of Political Economy, as taught by Henry George and others of that school.

II. The means employed shall be the holding of Sunday evening meetings; the dissemination of literature, and such other means as may be from time to time deemed necessary.

The list of lectures to be delivered at the institute during the first three months of this year is as follows:

General Booth's Scheme; Fraternity; In Darkest Poverty, and the Way Out; Some Ancient Greek Experiments in Economics, and the Principles of Society; An Eight Hours' Day and How Best to Obtain it; The Submerged Tenth in Darkest England; The House of Lords; Politicians and Political Obligations; The Relationship of the Sexes; Why are House Rents High in Cities; Books; The People's Leaders and Mis-Leaders.

Professor G. G. A. Murray, Joseph Davidson, John Mitchell and J. M. Cunningham are among the lecturers.

The Mayor of the city of Marquette, Mich., reports that the city's electric light and water plant netted it $4,000 for the past year, and he predicts that in a few years the revenue from these two sources will be sufficient to pay the city's expenses.

In a late issue of the London Labor World, Michael Davitt asks: "How long are the million workingmen of London going to stand the rule of the drones, and their appropriation of the £15,000,000 which the unearned increment of the land of London yields every year?" The Cork Eagle answers the question thus:

They will have to stand it until M. Davitt himself leads them in a vigorous crusade against not alone the "drones" of London, but the "drones" throughout the kingdom. They will have to stand it until they are combined as one man to compel Parliament to sternly stop the hidden hand of landlordism from filching the toilers' legitimate earnings. They will have to stand it until they do this, and this they cannot do until they cease, once and for all, the insane and wasting strike policy which is bringing ruin on themselves and on trade, while they allow the landlord, the common enemy, to escape scot free with his unearned millions. The working men will have to stand the present inequalities and injustices—which are ever increasing as population and inventions increase—until it is unmistakably explained to them where lies the cause of their wrongs, and what is the true remedy. With him rests the responsibility as to whether his very significant question above quoted is to be answered in our day or not. He has put the question. He knows the answer. Let him, then, in God's name, go to work and demonstrate to the world how the problem is to be solved!

The Missouri House of Representatives spent the afternoon of February 2 in a warm debate on the subject of taxation. The report before us, clipped from the St. Louis Republic, is very meagre, but it shows that great interest was taken in the question. The bill before the House was one providing that real and personal property having indebtedness thereon should be exempt from taxation to the extent of $2,000. It was ordered engrossed by a large majority.

The gentlemen who are "touring" the United States on foot—in other words, our tramps—would do well to step around to Cook County, Illinois. In order to get a resting place they can commit some little crime that will land them in the Cook County jail. When there, the sheriff will entertain them in a style little short of royal. Read the breakfast, dinner and supper bill of fare:

Breakfast—Ham and eggs, beefsteak, broiled whitefish, cutlets, plain or breaded: baked, fried or lyonnaise potatoes. This menu is varied with the days. Mackerel or pickled codfish can be had on order.

Dinner—Soups, different kinds, according to days, Friday furnishing oyster soup and clam or fish chowder, and on other days there are beef, vegetable, mullagatawny, mock turtle, puree of pease, bean, rice. The other articles on the dinner bill of fare are roast beef, roast pork, roast mutton, roast veal, corned beef and cabbage, jowl and spinach and vegetables, lettuce with egg: dessert, pies and puddings of various kinds.

Supper—Coffee, tea with sugar and cream, cold meats of various kinds, cakes or fruits.

Pretty good board that, even if it is in a jail, with the additional advantage of being free to the roomers. Of course the people of Cook County have to pay for all this, and as a consequence there is some "kicking;" but the sheriff who has charge of the jail says, in defence of the rather elaborate menu which he daily presents to his prisoner boarders, that the result is, "he has no trouble with his prisoners; they do not try to escape," and that "they are more satisfied with their lot than men in jail generally are." Well, we should say so. Men who would try to break out of a place where prisoners are fed as they are in the Cook County jail ought to be made to work.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

GETTING RID OF THE SURPLUS.

Senator Carlisle has contributed to the Forum for February an article on "The Vanishing Surplus," in which he shows how, under the policy developed by the present Republican Government, "What was two years ago the richest public treasury in the world will be substantially bankrupt long before the term of the present Administration shall expire."

At the beginning of the first fiscal year under Republican management, July 1, 1889, the cash balance in the Treasury was $149,000,000; at the end of the year, June 30, 1890, it had already decreased to $111,000,000, but this year had been provided for partly by a Democratic house. Six months only of the present year, provided for by a Republican Congress entirely, has reduced the available cash balance from $111,000,000 to only $38,000,000. For this same fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates an expenditure of $354,000,000, showing an increase of $57,000,000, or over a million a week over 1890; but Senator Carlisle claims that this estimate is far too low, for on account of recent legislation at least $15,000,000 must be added to the Secretary's estimate for pensions, and $10,000,000 for general deficiencies. The total ordinary expenditures will be, he thinks, $379,000,000, of which $148,000,000 will be for pensions. The original amount estimated for pensions for this year was only $98,000,000. Making a careful estimate of what the customs and other revenues of the Government will be under the new tax laws, Mr. Carlisle makes out the following balance sheet for this year:

ASSETS.
Cash on hand at end of last year, July 1, 1890	$111,000,000
Receipts	387,000,000
Total	$498,000,000
LIABILITIES.
Ordinary expenditures	$379,000,000
Purchase of bonds, etc., and other expenditures as per Secretary's report	133,000,000
Total	$512,000,000

If this is a correct estimate there will be a deficit on July 1, 1891, of $14,000,000. That is, in one year our Government will have gotten rid of a surplus of $111,000,000, and in addition will have gone in debt $14,000,000.

For the next year, ending July 1, 1892, the Senator accepts the Government's estimate of $373,000,000 for the total receipts, and from this figures that the deficiency will have increased by the end of that year to $84,000,000. In two years we will have made a change from plus $111,000,000 to minus $84,000,000, thus going behind-hand nearly $200,000,000. The pensions in this year will be $160,000,000.

In the meantime, some $51,000,000 of bonds will fall due on September 1, 1891. Mr. Sherman and others, realizing the probable inability of the Government to pay them from the surplus, are already proposing to issue $200,000,000 of new bonds to take up these and other outstanding obligations.

Senator Carlisle estimates the loss in sugar duties under the law which goes in effect in March this year at $18,000,000 a year, or one-third of the amount at present collected. At the same time the sugar bounties to be paid to domestic manufacturers will take $10,000,000 a year out of the Treasury, and in the course of the next year the Government will probably have inaugurated the policy of paying annually $4,000,000 or so, at least, in bounties and subsidies to shipowners and builders. But while the loss in revenue under the new tariff will be considerable, and these bounties and subsidies will take quite a large sum, the men who want to get rid of the money in the Treasury have not depended on such small subtractions as these. In their desire to change the surplus into a deficiency as quickly as possible and stop the cry against unnecessary taxation, the Republicans have adopted the method which would excite the least opposition—they have given it away in pensions. In 1889 the pensions were $87,000,000; in 1890, $107,000,000; in 1891, according to Senator Carlisle, they will be $148,000,000; and in 1892, $160,000,000. The country will be fortunate if they do not reach $200,000,000 a year very soon. General Garfield said nineteen years ago, that the expenditures for pensions would probably decrease, year by year. At that time they were only $28,000,000. He did not realize to what extremes the necessity of getting rid of the Government receipts would drive legislators who are bound to keep taxes high at any cost. Senator Carlisle says of these pension expenditures:

No standing army in the world costs the people so much as our army of discharged soldiers. Great Britain, with a regular army of more than 225,000 officers and men, and a total force, effective and non-effective, of 618,000, pays annually less than $75,000,000; and France, with a regular force of 580,000, besides an enormous reserve, pays $111,000,000. The army of the German Empire, the best-appointed and best-equipped military force in the world, consisting, on a peace footing, of 492,000 officers and men, costs annually less than $92,000,000; while the actual field force of Russia, numbering 814,000, is maintained at an expense of less than $94,000,-

600. These are the annual charges to which the people of four great European nations are subjected, in order to maintain a constantly available and effective force for their own defense in case of war, and for the preservation of the "balance of power" which their governments consider necessary to guarantee their independence. Although we are at peace among ourselves and with all the world, and have no foreign or domestic policy to make such an expenditure necessary, we are paying more than $135,000,000 annually to the soldiers of a war that closed twenty-five years ago.

Since the formation of our government the rate of increase in its expenditures has been very great at all times. "Ordinarily," says Senator Carlisle, "the growth of expenditures ought not to keep pace with the growth of population." But he shows that while our population has increased to sixteen times what it was in 1790, our expenditures, exclusive of interest on the public debt, have increased to one hundred and thirty times what they were then. "This is without a parallel, in history," he says.

But the way the money is being spent shows clearly that the recent enormous increase in expenditures is different from the previous increase. It is a deliberate attempt to throw money away—do anything with it, rather than decrease taxes or allow the popular agitation for lower taxation to gain any headway. The change from a surplus of $111,000,000 to a deficit of $84,000,000 in twenty-four months can be accounted for in no other way.

DEMOCRACY IN JAPAN.

The results of the first election ever held by the people of Japan has shown how certain one step in progress is to lead to further progress. Constitutional government was secured there less than two years ago, and the first election of representatives to the Diet took place in July last. Rev. W. E. Griffis, in the February Forum, writing on "Political Progress in Japan," says that in the first parliament the progressive parties have, if united, a sufficient majority to easily control the entire Government. This is surprising, because only the richer classes were allowed to vote, about one man in fourteen possessing the franchise, and of the two houses of the Diet the upper house is composed of the different classes of nobility and imperial appointees. And yet a great majority of the 600 members of the whole Diet are in favor of at once increasing the number of voters, restricting the royal prerogative and extending popular rights. Men who were a few years ago in prison and outlawed for their political opinions have been elected to the Diet. Every rank and all professions are represented. The two great noble families, who for the past twenty years have controlled, absolutely, the imperial Government, have together only twenty-eight members in the Diet. From the government of a theocratic dynasty, controlled by a handful of nobles, Japan has at a bound become "a land of public schools, of ballots, and of churches owned by the people." Eleven Christians have been elected to the Diet, and a large number of graduates of European and American colleges.

The elections went off smoothly. Over 90 per cent. of those entitled to vote availed themselves of the privilege, and as illiteracy is almost unknown, the system of writing ballots worked very well. In fact, the people have shown that they know how to take care of themselves as far as they are allowed to do so, and they propose to give themselves more opportunities in that regard as soon as they can. As Mr. Griffis says: "Demos is rising."

HAS CHRISTIANITY FAILED?

"Christianity is the religion of democracy, of universal equality. * * * The feudal lords who shouted Christian war-cries, and the despotic kings who swore by the Holy Rood and by Our Lady, were wholly unconscious that in the creed they cherished were the germs of the democratic influences which would in time undermine thrones and make aristocracy an empty name." So writes Ouida in the North American Review for February, in an article entitled "Has Christianity Failed?" But while appreciating the spirit of the teachings of the New Testament, she is nevertheless forced to answer the question proposed in the affirmative. A consideration of the monstrous discrepancies between the social adjustments of the so-called Christian nations of the world and those teachings compel her to say:

May not this religion justly be said to have failed conspicuously in impressing itself upon mankind? It has impressed its formulas; not its spirit. It has sewn a phylactery on the hem of humanity's robe: It has never touched the soul of humanity beneath the robe. * * * For of all absolutely powerless things on earth Christianity is the most powerless, even though sovereigns are still consecrated, multitudes still baptized, parliaments and tribunals still opened, and countless churches and cathedrals still builded in its name. It has become a shibboleth, a husk, a robe with no heart beating within it, a winged angel carved in dead wood.

Seeing clearly the spirit of freedom and equality that is the vital power of Christianity, she is at a loss to explain the failure of professedly Christian people to adjust their arrangements to it. She thinks it is partly because it has too much in it that is egotistic, selfish, leading a man to think only of his own salvation in a future world, regardless of others; hence men are careless about others in this world. But this, if it were true, would completely contradict her statement that it teaches the widest community of interests and the universal brotherhood of man. The other reason she gives is its impracticability. She says:

In a small and a poor community Christianity may be a creed possible in its practical realization and consistent in its simplicity of existence; but in the mad world of modern life, with its overwhelming wealth and its overwhelming poverty, with its horrible satiety and its horrible hunger, with its fiendish greed and its ghastly crimes, its endless lusts and its cruel bitterness of hatreds, Christianity can only be one of two things—either a nullity, as it is now in all national life, or a dynamic force allied with and ruling through socialism.

Father Ignatius, the English monk, tries to answer her in the same issue of the Review, but his reply is mainly devoted to denying her statements about what Christianity has or has not done. He fails utterly to account for the main fact, that our social system is not a system that conforms to the spirit of equality. Such a dodging of the question is no answer at all.

There is but one explanation of it. It is that men have not realized, have not taken the trouble to think out, what equality and democracy really mean. Christianity, like every great religion, teaches general truths. It is for men to constantly seek out how to apply these truths. Men confuse themselves and others by dwelling on the literal teachings and specific details of Christianity, and finding them as they think impracticable, they forget or do not try to follow out to its logical conclusion its great general teaching of equal rights. Men must think for themselves; religion can only give them a basis to work on. They must think out, as well as work out, their own salvation. As Voltaire says: "Think makes think;" the general thought of a religion must lead men to think out the particular applications. When men will do this the truth will indeed make them free; and the great principle of equality will cease to be a nullity without the aid of Socialism to keep it alive.

WELCOMING GEORGE TO BERMUDA.

When Mr. George was talking with his friends about a good place in which to take a complete rest a suggestion was made that perhaps in Bermuda he would find a place where the Single Tax had never been heard of, and where he would escape all invitations and temptations to discuss the principles with which his name is identified. It seems, however, that the editor of the Bermuda Colonist, the Liberal paper of the island, is a Single Tixer and has been such for years. It was, therefore, an easy task for him to reply to an article in a Tory paper of the island, in which Mr. George was alluded to as "a Socialist." The reply is the leading editorial in the Colonist for Wednesday, February 4, and is as follows:

The most distinguished civil visitor Bermuda has had for many a day is Mr. Henry George, of New York City—who is comfortably quartered at the Princess Hotel. Mr. George, was a few weeks ago run down by work and sought these Islands for rest. Only a short time ago he returned from a lecturing tour in the Australian colonies, where he was received with great enthusiasm. His themes were "Free Trade" and the "Single Tax." At Sydney, New South Wales, 7,000 people in a drenching rain filled the Exposition Building in their desire to hear him. It was the arduous work on this trip that largely contributed to his break-down. We can hardly blame the Australians, however, for having given us this opportunity of entertaining so distinguished a public man.

Mr. George is famous the world over as the author of "Progress and Poverty," which advocates the abolition of all taxes, save a Single Tax on the value of land, irrespective of improvements. This is the direct opposite of Socialism and for this he is no doubt ironically called a "Socialist." The movement his book inaugurated is now forcing itself on public attention in the United States, Australia and England. The next Congress at Washington, meeting March 4, will have a dozen Single Tax members who are also Democrats. The Democratic party is largely honeycombed with the Henry George idea, and the Colored Farmer's Alliance, representing 4,000,000 colored farmers, has come out for the Single Tax. Within the past month the Mayors of New Haven, Conn., and of Minneapolis, Minn., have declared for the Single Tax. The Knights of Labor, the great wage-earner's order, have for a year or more been fighting hard to force the Single Tax to the front.

Mr. George, who is accompanied by Mrs. George and Mr. and Mrs. Simon Mendelson, of New York, will remain here till next month. Were it not that Mr. George's physician recommends absolute rest and freedom from excitement, there is no doubt many of our citizens would be glad to tender him a recognition of their appreciation of his public services in the interest of humanity.

MORE STATE SOCIALISM.

The municipal authorities of Cologne, Germany, have resolved to furnish employment to 13,000 men in that city who are now out of work. The rate of pay will be 36 cents a day. As Cologne has an adult male population of only 40,000 or 50,000 at the outside, the 13,000 unemployed are about one-fourth of the whole number. These men are practically paupers. They will be set at work, of course, probably on the roads and streets, but it will be just the same kind of work done by a tramp who applies at a charity organization society woodyard. Such expedients not only degrade the people but lead directly to socialism, for the idea that the government shall "furnish employment" to its citizens is one of the fundamental ideas of socialism as the ordinary people understand it.

SINGLE TAX NEWS.

SINGLE TAX LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
42 UNIVERSITY PLACE, New York, February 10, 1891.

The attention of officers of Single Tax organizations is called to the resolutions adopted at the National Conference to the effect that all organizations subscribing to the National Single Tax platform shall be eligible for membership in the League. Thus far but very few clubs have formally subscribed to the platform and enrolled themselves in the League, and officers of organizations that have as yet made no move in the matter are earnestly requested to bring the question before their clubs and apply at once to the secretary of the National Committee for enrollment.

The National Committee is circulating a petition asking the United States House of Representatives to appoint a special committee to make inquiry into and report upon the expediency of raising all public revenues by a Single Tax upon the value of land, irrespective of improvements, to the exclusion of all other taxes, whether in the form of tariffs upon imports, taxes upon internal productions, or otherwise. It will send blank petitions on application to any address, and Single Tax men are urged to obtain petitions and solicit signatures as a most convenient and effective way of starting the discussion of our principles.

It has also taken up the newspaper work of the Memphis committee, and is now engaged in circularizing newspapers in every State, calling their attention to the wide-spread interest now shown in the subject of the Single Tax, and urging that they call on the press companies supplying their ready prints and plates for Single Tax matter.

The secretary desires to appeal again to our Single Taxers for renewed effort in behalf of the petition. But ten months now remain for its completion, and it seems almost criminal not to take advantage to the utmost of this opportunity to bring the question of the Single Tax so prominently before the whole country.

Reports from our friends go to show that six or seven of our Congressmen elected to the next House of Representatives are Single Taxers, while many others are favorable to our ideas. The respectful consideration of our petitions is therefore not only assured, but the appointment of the special committee of inquiry is almost a certainty. Draw on the committee for a supply of petition blanks and give the petition the boom that its importance deserves.

Subscriptions toward the expenses of this committee work remain as reported last week, viz., $1,452.20.

WOMEN'S ENROLLMENT COMMITTEE.

Mauch Chunk, Pa., February 9.—Since our last report we have received the names of Single Tax women in three additional States—Indiana, Maryland and Nebraska—while from women in New Jersey and Kansas have come letters asking for further information about the Single Tax. One of our members has written that our enrollment has been the means of her introduction to a most interesting Single Tax club; she has attended one of its meetings and hopes to attend regularly. Another writes that she has found cheer and encouragement by receiving letters from "others who are working for the uplifting of humanity and the preservation of our Republic." One State Representative of the National League has sent us the names of several Single Tax women in his State. We would be glad to have other members of the National League send us the names and addresses of Single Tax women in their State, that we may write and ask them to help us, as our only aim is to advance the Single Tax cause, and that must be dear to them also. The outlook is encouraging and to every Single Tax woman we say again: "Send us your name and address, with any advice or suggestions you can offer as to how to advance the knowledge of the Single Tax among women. Please address our secretary, C. Estella Bachman, Mauch Chunk, Pa.

SUGGESTIONS WHICH SHOULD BE ACTED UPON.

R. G. Brown, Memphis, Tenn.—It has been some time since Tennessee was heard from in the Roll of States, but we have not been quite dead in this neck of the woods for all that. The cotton season in Memphis means hard work night and day for a number of our men, and particularly for one who is frequently a contributor to this department, M. H. McDowell. Since last Spring he has had charge of the column in the Weekly Appeal-Avalanche, but the pressure of work forced him to give it up in December, and since then it has been in my hands.

I want to call the attention of Single Tax men all over the country to this means of reaching the people. Almost all the large dailies publish weekly editions, mainly for circulation in the country surrounding the place of publication. These weeklies are a resume for the most part of what has appeared the week previous in the daily, and special departments, which are filled, in many instances, by plate matter. We have succeeded in getting the Appeal-Avalanche to publish every week a "Single Tax Department," which is entirely under the control of the Memphis Single Tax Association, and for the opinions and views of which the paper is in nowise responsible. In this way all questions can be treated in the most radical manner without embarrassment to the editor, who is perfectly at liberty to roast us in the editorial column, if he sees fit. He has not seen fit so far. The discussion of economic problems in the city and in the country is becoming so universal, and the people all over the land are interesting themselves so much in the Single Tax, that it will require very little effort to induce any wideawake newspaper man to see that his paper will be benefited by having a Single Tax Department. It need not take more than three or four hours of a man's time each week to make such a column bright and newsy; and the work will afford larger returns than any other that I know of. There is never a week passes that I do not get from two to five requests for tracts from some reader of our column, and every now and then I am cheered by a letter from some man who has seen the cat, whiskers, claws and all. The articles need not be original; THE STANDARD will supply plenty of material, and often men who have not the ability to write, are possessed of critical process in a high degree, which would enable them to make excellent selections. The mere fact that a man sees a subject treated in his paper week by week will often excite his interest in it, and induce him to examine into it for himself. Printers' ink is what the cause needs most at the present time, in my judgment.

In addition to the column in the Appeal-Avalanche, I have since the first of the year been furnishing a series of Single Tax articles to the Unionist, the organ of the Farmers' Alliance and trades unions in West Tennessee. These articles were solicited by the editor of the Unionist, and no limit is placed upon me either as to the scope or length of the articles. Organized labor in this section is practically unanimous in support of the Single Tax, and the farmers all over the West are studying earnestly its principles and arguments. On January 15 there appeared in the St. Louis Journal of Agriculture an article of mine, in which I offered to send tracts to such of its readers as were desirous of investigating the subject more at length than the space allowed me permitted of. Since then every mail has brought me requests for tracts, and up to date I have sent out more than five hundred of them. I enclose you the article to use in any way you may see fit. The Journal is the official organ of the Farmers' Alliance in Missouri, and more than half the requests for tracts have come from secretaries and lecturers of sub-unions of that body. We have numbers of men in our ranks who have more time and greater ability in this kind of work than I have, and I am persuaded that if they will make the effort we can get a full and free hearing for the Single Tax in the official organs of the Farmers' Alliance and kindred organizations all over the country. The effect of so doing would be of incalculable benefit to the cause of industrial emancipation.

SPREADING THE LIGHT IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

W. E. Brokaw, Sioux Falls.—Tuesday morning, January 27, I walked to Brandon station (a mile), and took the train to Valley Springs. After making arrangements for a meeting there the next night and transacting other business, I left one grip at the hotel and, taking the other one, walked to Manley, about a mile over the line in Minnesota. I had just read in the paper of the blizzard in New York and throughout the East, but I found the sun too hot for my fur overcoat, so I carried it on one arm. There was no snow in sight, the road was dusty, and the day as mild as May. At Manley I took the train to Hills. I never saw finer weather at this time of year, except in Southern California. I found no arrangements had been made for me at Hills, but, there being some farmers in town, I stuck a notice up in the post office and the merchants told them to tell all they should meet. I talked in a room in a vacant dwelling. As at Brandon, I called them to order and began my talk without any introduction, and closed it by asking for a collection, and I got a liberal one. I took an order for eleven copies of "Protection or Free Trade?" When I got up Wednesday morning it was snowing, and the wind from the Northeast, our snowy quarter. In returning to Valley Springs I had to walk the mile and a half from Manley junction through the snow, in a snow storm. The storm prevented any one coming in from the country that night, so that my audience in the Town Hall was small. I met a Single Tax printer in Valley Springs, who said he was in New York city during the George-Hewitt campaign. I had quite an enjoyable visit with him.

Thursday morning, 29th, was clear and mild. In the afternoon I caught a ride with a farmer who took my grips to Rowena. I left him a mile from the home of the man I had written to to announce my talk, walking there through drifted snow in a corn field. I found that no arrangements had been made. But after supper he took me to town, stopping on the way to inform neighbors. Less than a dozen farmers gathered in a store, and then we adjourned to the hotel, where a lot of Italian and Irish paving cutters were boarding. It was after 8 p. m. when we entered the hotel. The men laid by their cards and squared themselves around to listen. More chairs were brought in and the ladies in the hotel came into the room. I proceeded "to business" without any introduction and talked an hour, after which an aged farmer made numerous objections, which I answered. I noticed a STANDARD laying on the counter, and was told that the man who took it happened to be out of town that night. All the quarrymen who could read English signed the petition.

Friday morning I took the train to East Sioux Falls, two and a half miles, where I found a batch of mail awaiting me, among them the first STANDARD I have received since I left Watertown. I am highly pleased with the new form of THE STANDARD. The greatest hardship I have to endure is not to be able to see its welcome face promptly each week, but I suppose that is a "cross" I will have to bear until victory perches on our standards. After looking over my mail I took one grip and walked out to Mr. Banning's, one and a half miles, where I began devouring my STANDARDS. As Mr. Banning said that notice had been posted and the public fully informed of my coming, I remained at his place until evening. But, although we waited in the schoolhouse until 8:30, none but a few of his neighbors came. I told them what the Single Tax was, gave them some tracts, and took their signatures. I then went to the drug store and secured the names of those loosing there. The next morning the postmaster told me that no one knew anything about it, and he had seen no notice; that he believed I would have had a large crowd if they had known it. The town is owned by the granite company, and most of the men are paving cutters. The post office is in the company store, the only store there. The postmaster, doctor, druggist and others were among the signers of the petition. The doctor ordered "Protection or Free Trade?"

Saturday morning I took the electric motor to Sioux Falls, about seven miles. The coming week I expect to spend among farmers farther from railroads, and look for less difficulties and more interest.

Enclosed find 54 petitions. No. 1 is a Single Tax printer, No. 2 a banker, No. 3 a doctor. Two are postmasters, one is a runner for a hardware firm, and most of the rest are farmers.

A LOUISIANA SINGLE TAX MEMORIAL.

A committee of the Louisiana Single Tax Club of New Orleans—James Middleton, George W. Roberts, J. B. Cameron, Thomas Dunn, F. D. Van Valkenberg and H. Riggio—have prepared a memorial on the subject of taxation and public revenues. The memorial is addressed to the "police, jurors and assessors of the State of Louisiana," and appears in the New Orleans City Item of January 30.

The address begins with the declaration that the question of taxation and public revenues is a subject of vital interest to every consumer, "for out of them must all taxes come," and that, therefore, "the just assessment and collection of public revenues are essential to wise and economical expenditure; for where the masses bear the great weight, and the wealthy few escape their just share, corruption in expenditure must develop; whereas, if all contribute their just proportion, then the great masters of industry and controllers of public opinion will see to it that the revenues are judiciously and economically spent." The memorial goes on to state briefly what duties the officials addressed are sworn to perform, and then hints that each of them may have in his mind what he considers an "ideal system" of taxation. The petitioners also have an "ideal system," to which they beg respectfully to call the attention of the tax officials. It is, of course, the Single Tax on land values. The committee tell what it means by the phrase "land values," which it is not necessary to explain to STANDARD readers. The effects of such a system of taxation would, the committee truly says, "be far-reaching in every department of human industry," and would "stimulate industry and discourage speculation, especially speculation in land." After drawing a picture of the happy results that would follow the adoption of the Single Tax, the committee frames it in these words: "An act establishing the Single Tax might well be termed an act to increase the number, stability and comforts of home."

But the petitioners recognize that—"to use the language of America's foremost statesman"—it is a "condition" and not a "theory" that must be met. "Louisiana, with a soil of greatest fertility, with a climate unsurpassed, with vast forests of magnificent timber, with waterways furnishing a facility for commerce, unequalled by any state in the Union, and with a brave and industrious population, is yet a laggard in the sisterhood of commonwealths. Her levees give way before the floods, bringing ruin to many; her highways in wet weather are well nigh impassable; her provisions for the indigent and insane are by no means the best; her schools, which should be her pride and her bulwark of safety, are in a dangerously backward condition." The committee especially emphasizes the needs of the school system, and goes on to show that as at present conducted it is a blot on the State of Louisiana to be contemplated with dismay. "But," says the memorial, "there is an immediate and sufficient remedy directly at hand, one that will give ample revenues and yet will promote industry, and interest the wealthier and privileged classes more fully in the judicious and economical administration of public affairs. It is the equitable assessment of all taxable property of the State according to the constitution and laws. Article 203 of the constitution provides that 'taxation shall be equal and uniform'—'and all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value.' Act No. 85 of 1888, sections 19 and 24, provides that all taxable property be assessed 'at its actual cash value.' The investigations made by the committee show conclusively that if these provisions were faithfully and impartially carried out, that at the lowest estimate there would be $50,000,000 added to the assessment lists in the parish of Orleans and $40,000,000 in the balance of the State, which would make an addition to the city revenues of over a million dollars, and a corresponding increase in the State. This increase of about $2,000,000 in the various revenues of the State would provide amply for every need, and yet it would not, says the committee, add one cent to the burdens of the mass of small property holders and purchasing consumers, but would come wholly out of the rich and privileged classes who are yearly taking advantage of the State, parishes and municipalities to that amount. Evidence in support of the above statements is given as follows:

The assessment of the State for 1879 was given in the United States census report at $160,000,000, in round numbers. The estimated wealth of the State was given as $422,000,000 for 1880.

In the World Almanac for 1890 the estimated wealth of the State was given for 1890 at $500,000,000, as against the assessment of $226,000,000 of 1880.

In the census estimate stocks, bonds, mortgages and currency are omitted and only actual wealth estimated.

The committee then says:

If we make the ridiculous assumption that the wealth of the State has remained stationary since 1880 at $422,000,000, and deduct the assessment as given in the last Auditor's report for 1889 of $226,000,000, we have $193,000,000 of unassessed property: allow $100,000,000 for exemptions, and we have left $93,000,000 that should be added to the assessment list.

Are we too conservative then when we say only ninety millions, fifty for the city and forty for the State?

Investigations in particular lines of property tend most strongly to show that these estimates are too low.

Space will not permit to go into details regarding private property, though many glaring illustrations can be cited.

This is markedly true regarding vacant and unimproved city lots and country lands.

There are thousands of acres, including some of the best timber lands in the State, assessed at less than a dollar per acre.

But the improved property of small taxpayers is usually assessed at its full cash value.

Those who improve lands are a benefit to the State; those who hold them vacant are an injury to the State, and should pay all that the law will permit for the privilege.

The committee then turns its attention to inequalities in the assessment of the properties of the telegraph and telephone companies, and cites instances where wires alone are assessed at from nothing to $350 per mile. As to assessments on railroad tracks, the committee shows that Orleans parish assesses them at $5,000 a mile, while in other parishes the assessment reaches $7,000 a mile. The total assessment value for all the railroad property in the State, including the steamship property of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, is a little over $11,000,000, or about $11,000 a mile; yet the Compendium of the Tenth Census reports the "total permanent and cash assets" per mile for the railroads of the United States at $63,797, and the "total capital paid in and borrowed" at $55,522 per mile. The Comptroller's report of the State of Texas for 1889 estimates the "average cost of roads and equipment per mile at $63,160." Commenting on these statements the committee says:

The roads centering on New Orleans, with their valuable privileges, should be worth as much per mile, but suppose they are worth $13,160 less per mile, or $50,000. Multiplying by the total mileage we have: 50,000 times 1,028 equals $51,400,000, as against an assessment of $11,355,780, or a deficiency of over $40,000,000 in the railroad assessment alone. Gentlemen, do we need go any further to show that we are conservative in estimating that $90,000,000 worth of property evades taxation in this State: that this property belongs to the wealthy and privileged, and that if it were assessed as the law demands, that nearly $2,000,000 would be added to the public revenues without increasing the burdens of the small property-holders and purchasing consumers.

The memorial concludes with the following peroration:

Gentlemen, with this princely addition to our revenues we could sweep away forever the odious occupation tax which is a burden upon the masses and an injury to the State. We could build good levees, improve the highways in the country, pave and drain New Orleans much more rapidly than we are now doing. We could provide for the indigent and insane in a proper manner, and pension the maimed heroes of the war. We could place our school system on a par with the more advanced States. A new era of prosperity would be ushered in such as we have not yet approximated to. With the advance in culture and prosperity among the workers would come the possibility of other and great reforms.

Gentlemen, the key to the situation is with you. Will you use it? We know your task will be onerous, not only because of our complex and unwieldy system of taxation, but also because of the opposition you will meet from those who have hitherto evaded their just share of the public burdens. But the welfare of the State demands its accomplishment. Your oath of office demands it. If you but meet the task in the spirit of that oath, you will be surprised how the people will rally to your support, and hail you as benefactors. We ask you so to do in the name of the industrial masses. We ask you for the welfare of the commonwealth of Louisiana.

SINGLE TAX LETTER WRITERS.

Next week will complete the list of new Democratic Congressmen elected to the next House. All letter writers who have not already done so are earnestly urged to get THE STANDARD of the last two weeks and write to every man named therein. These men are in a peculiarly receptive mood just now, and most of them will feel really grateful for pertinent information regarding direct taxation which will assist them in acquitting themselves creditably in their new positions. Tracts Nos. 4, 5, 6, 9, 17 and 36 are excellent for enclosures.

NEW YORK CITY.

The monthly meeting of the Manhattan Single Tax Club was held at the club rooms last Monday evening, William McCabe in the chair. Mr. Dobbin, reporting for the Agitation Committee, said that he had been in communication with Mr. Thomas G. Shearman regarding the matter of drawing up a bill to be presented to the Legislature, which would provide for a separate assessment of land values and improvement values, and with the consent of the club vigorous steps would be taken to push such a bill until it became law. The reports of the other committees of the club were taken up and discussed. Mr. Steers said he had been requested by the Executive Committee of the People's Municipal League to extend invitations to such of the members of the club as were favorably disposed to attend a meeting of the General Committee of the League on the evening of February 18. He also asked that the club take steps looking to acting officially with the League. There was considerable discussion on this point, and the club decided to not act in the matter as a club, on the ground that it was going outside of the work for which the club was formed.

Dr. Walter Mendelson addressed the club on the necessity of amending the constitution so as to make women eligible to membership, with the result that the Managing Board was requested to come together immediately upon the adjournment of the club meeting and prepare such amendment. The board met as requested and appointed a sub-committee consisting of Jerome O'Neill, Dr. Mendelson and Benjamin Doblin to make the required draft. As soon as the sub-committee have agreed on an amendment it will be placed on the bulletin board for the inspection of the members of the club, and at the next meeting of the Managing Board it will be considered, together with such suggestions relating to it as may be made by the members. Then at the next meeting of the club it will be presented for action as to its form; then at the succeeding meeting it will be acted on finally.

Last Saturday evening the House Committee treated the members of the club and their friends to a large and succulent clam chowder. It is the intention of the committee to set a lunch every Saturday evening hereafter, and all friends are invited to participate.

Mr. Wm. T. Croasdale addressed the Manhattan Single Tax Club last Sunday evening, on "Independents and Partisanship," in which he pointed out that, despite the charges frequently made that the Single Tax movement was being made a tender to the Democratic party, that it was our duty to help that party so long as it was going our way.

Mr. Todd, of Cuba, N. Y., who was present, had some objections to urge against the Single Tax, and he was unanimously invited to address the meeting. His objections were hardly clearly stated, and he was asked to put questions, the answers to which might clear away the doubts in his mind; but the gentleman continually shifted his ground, and it is impossible to say whether he was satisfied with the answers he received. Evidently, Mr. Todd is just now in that frame of mind that he can only be convinced by arguing the matter in his own mind; but he is interested, and that is a good sign. There is no doubt that in time he will come round.

Next Sunday evening, Rev. Dr. John W. Kramer will address the club on "Is it Right? The Ethics of the Land Question." It is expected that several prominent divines of this city will attend to hear Dr. Kramer.

BROOKLYN.

G. W. Thompson.—At last Wednesday evening's gathering of the Brooklyn Single Tax Club a joint meeting was held between that club and the Woman's Brooklyn Single Tax Club. It is hoped that these Wednesday evening meetings will continue under their joint auspices. At this meeting, on Wednesday evening last, this resolution was discussed:

Resolved, that in spite of the advance of civilization the tendency now is of wages to the minimum that will give a bare subsistence.

The question was very generally discussed by the large numbers attendant. Thos. G. Shearman will speak at the meeting next Wednesday night, on the "Money Question." It is to be hoped that a large audience will greet him on this occasion.

NEW YORK STATE.

S. T., Buffalo.—The Tax Reform Club, of this city, has issued a circular, showing the advantages that could be gained by the adoption of the Single Tax.

MASSACHUSETTS.

S. T., Boston.—Local Assembly 5572, K. of L., composed of freight handlers, met in Dexter Hall, January 30. A committee, appointed at a previous meeting to investigate the amount of vacant land kept out of the hands of the working people by speculators, referred to in the last STANDARD, made a lengthy report and the following recommendations:

That a bill be drafted by the State Legislature that the State Government seize, under the rights of eminent domain, all vacant lands held for speculative purposes, adjacent to all steam or electric surface and elevated railroads, at present erected or to be erected; that such lands be cut up into house lots and deeded to, at a sum not to exceed $200 per lot, working-men under a mortgage by the State; that 2½ per cent. be charged as interest; that the land be appraised by a State appraiser; that each holder of a deed be advanced enough money to build a home of reasonable dimensions thereon; that when the sum advanced by the State be refunded a clear conveyance of the title should be made to the holder of the title.

The matter was discussed at length, and was referred to the next meeting of the Assembly.

At a hearing on the extension of school suffrage for women to municipal suffrage, given by the committee on women suffrage of the Massachusetts Legislature, on February 4, among the many speakers was William Lloyd Garrison, who argued that the conduct of municipal affairs was a private business matter, and should be taken out of the realm of politics. Municipal government is housekeeping enlarged. He sympathized with the Governor in his endeavors to extend the suffrage, but could not see why he was blind to the fact that more than one half of Massachusetts' population was deprived of the ballot.

At a meeting of the Boston Common Council on February 5 Mr. Kinney, of Ward 22, offered the following:

Whereas, it is believed by the City Council of Boston, that the best interests of our citizens and taxpayers would be subserved by the City of Boston having complete control of all elevated railroads that may be constructed within the bounds of this municipality, it is therefore Ordered, That his Honor, the Mayor, be and he hereby is requested to petition the General Court for such legislation as will authorize the City of Boston to construct and maintain such elevated railroads as the City Council, with the approval of the Mayor, may from time to time adjudge to be required for the convenience and necessities of the inhabitants of this city. And it is further Ordered, That his Honor, the Mayor, be requested to remonstrate against the granting by the General Court of the petitions of any private persons or corporations for leave to locate elevated railroads in Boston, until the petition of the Mayor, as above provided, is finally disposed of by the Legislature, or until authority has been granted to the City of Boston to exact compensation for the use of its streets by persons or corporations.

The order was assigned to the next meeting of the Council.

Hamlin Garland, Roxbury.—The work goes merrily on here. My own work outside the regular Single Tax lines increases. I read my Arena article, "The New Declaration of Rights," in Worcester on the 5th, and I am to read it for "Old and New," a woman's club in Malden, in the Universalist church, on the 10th. On the 19th I speak before another woman's club, in Melrose, on "Individualism and Nationalism." Each Friday evening I meet a group of inquiring people in a parlor on Huntington avenue, and I have each week a page of Single Tax matters in Living Issues. I have just received a notice from the "Round Table," a well-known literary club here, that Mr. Garrison is to be present on the 12th to speak on the Single Tax, together with a special invitation to me to be present. So far as I know this is the first time such a subject has come before that club.

Herbert E. Collum, Haverhill.—We have formed a Single Tax League here in Haverhill, and there seems to be a strong sentiment among a great many of the citizens in favor of a one tax system, but there is a lack of interest in the matter of organizing. However, we have every hope of making our League one of power if not of numbers. We have circulated quite a number of Single Tax petitions to Congress, and in the majority of cases have received signatures. We have not, I believe, so much logic to contend with as prejudice and misconception concerning what belongs to man as against any other man, and what belongs to all collectively.

NEW JERSEY.

J. A. Craig, Paterson.—Thirty-four petitions. Those which I have been sending you for some time past, including the present batch, should be credited largely to William Parkins, James Hill, John Ridgway, Jacob Mick and Charles M. Mick. These gentlemen keep steadily on in the work.

OHIO.

Alf. H. Henderson, Cincinnati.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of our club was held January 22 in the parlors of the Dennison House. New officers were elected and steps taken for aggressive work the coming year. Among other subjects discussed was the Rawlings bill, just passed by the Ohio House, requiring manufacturers to pay taxes on the raw material as well as on the finished product. The bill has excited the violent opposition of the manufacturers and merchants of the cities, while, on the other hand, the Farmers' Alliance, in session at Galion, has taken strong ground in its favor. Our club appointed a committee to draw up resolutions against it and to confer with like committees from the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, that active measures of opposing its passage in the Senate may be taken. A resolution was passed favoring the Mallon Australian Election bill. The Single Tax platform was formally subscribed to and application made for membership in the National League. The action of the Executive Committee of the club in opposing a bill which has been introduced into the Legislature, giving corporations the power to own and sell real estate, caused much adverse comment on the same lines as Mr. Shearman's article in THE STANDARD, "Reforms which do not Reform."

P. J. Snay, Galion.—Two petitions. I received a bundle of 500 tracts, furnished by L. E. Siemon, John Quinlan and Mr. Davies, of Cleveland, and at the Farmer's Alliance Convention's first evening session (held in January) took a position at entrance to the hall as soon as it was opened, and handed a tract to each person as they passed up stairs. I might have used a hundred more if I had had them. There was a light where I was posted, and at least one-third of those who received the tracts read the headings, folded the papers and put them in their pockets. The others put them in their pockets without looking to see what they were. After I had exhausted the supply, I went into the hall and up into the gallery and looked over the assembly to see the result. A good many were reading the tracts. When I left the hall, I looked to see if any had been thrown away, and I counted three. I was pleased with the showing. The next evening I took about 600 of the circulars (passages from "Protection or Free Trade?") which we had marked (at the blank for signatures) and folded and took my position again; and again I was graciously received, and about 500 circulars were distributed. On the third evening I took more circulars and some blanks, reached the hall early and made personal attacks upon the delegates as they entered; and, after urgently soliciting perhaps fifty individuals, got into a questioning crowd, which kept me busy until after the gavel called order.

I now think that the farmers, more than any other class, are ready to consider reasonably presented theories, and that as soon as they have sufficiently grasped the true inwardness of the Single Tax principle, it will go in spite of the hyena opposition it will encounter.

I had intended to spend one full day among the delegates, but was compelled to attend to my regular business. The work that was done, however, will bear fruit, I think, and be heard from later.

H. M. Stott, Miamisburg.—We are doing our work in the Farmers' Alliance and K. and L. Assemblies. At every opportunity we present the Single Tax to the members of these organizations. We are now working for ballot reform and to circulate the tenth edition of "Protection or Free Trade?" If farmers will only read it will certainly lead their thoughts in the direction of their best interests.

ILLINOIS.

Warren Worth Bailey, Chicago, February 6.—We were admirably entertained yesterday evening by Mr. Leon Hornstein, another of our developing speakers. He talked of "Reciprocity," and talked well, the audience remaining interested throughout. Mr. Hornstein denounced the Jim Blaine reciprocity scheme out of hand. He said it was a scheme and nothing more, as dishonest as it was futile, and as shameless as it was absurd. What we want is Free Trade, not trade dependent on the whims, the caprice, the ignorance or the interest of legislatures and presidents. The Blaine scheme is a cover for the High Taxers, a stalking horse behind which the Protectionist is but poorly concealed. It remained to be seen whether it would fool the people.

Dr. J. G. Malcolm, of Hutchinson, Kansas, was present, and very happily responded when called on to open the discussion. The doctor, as far back as 1856, in a public debate in Canada, denied the right of private property in land, and during all the years since has held to the fundamental doctrine he then proclaimed. But it was not until "Progress and Poverty" came into his hands in 1881 that he saw how the rights of all to the use of the earth could be established and equitably maintained by means of the Single Tax, of which he has since then been a sturdy, an intelligent and an indefatigable champion. His remarks on Blaine's policy were highly humorous, and the audience cheered and cheered again in recognition of his frequent hits. He also spoke passingly of "booms," many of which he had witnessed, and whose direful effects he graphically described, concluding with a "Dream of Heaven" in verse that fairly convulsed the house, which applauded to the echo when the doctor resumed his seat.

The discussion was continued by Mr. Lehmeier, who thought reciprocity a step in the direction of Free Trade, and by Mr. Place, Mr. Reese, Mr. Cooling, Mr. White and others, who ably sustained the position of Mr. Hornstein and still further showed up the true anisms of the Blaine scheme, which Mr. White said was designed ultimately to break down the Monroe Doctrine, establish a continental protection wall and make the United States the armed arbiter of the trade of the Western hemisphere.

One of the pleasing features of the meeting was the presence of Senator Cassell, Mrs. Haskett, Mrs. Loomis, and other representatives of the Equal Suffrage Association, who came to invite our club to participate in a reception to Mrs. Helen M. Conger on the 10th, and in a public discussion with their organization on the 17th at the Sherman House. The club formally accepted the invitation and the programme for the meeting of the 17th will include addresses from one or more representatives of the Single Tax club. The Equal Suffragists are taking a very lively interest in the Single Tax question, and we are extremely hopeful of still further engaging their attention and good will. I hope that the Single Tax people of Chicago will turn out in large numbers on the 17th (Tuesday evening), and let us testify to earnestness, enthusiasm and broad sympathy with those who are seeking to establish the equal rights of women.

Mr. Louis F. Post has been in this city this week.

Is there a Single Taxer in Chicago who can make a public speech in German? If there is I would like to hear from him. One is much needed.

The Evening Post Mayoralty contest is still in progress, and Edward Osgood Brown is beginning to roll up a good many votes. Single Tax men should rally to his support and write briefly to the editor why Mr. Brown is the man for Mayor.

A few days ago I sent a carefully marked copy of Mayor Joseph B. Sargent's inaugural message to the New Haven Council to Mayor De Witt C. Cregier, calling his especial attention to that part relating to taxation. Mayor Cregier, in acknowledging the receipt of the message, wrote:

I have read it with much interest, especially because it voices my sentiments upon important governmental questions, some of which I have in an humble and comparative faint way, officially given endorsement, and, permit me to add, views which I still hold and continue to develop so far as I am able.

The Chicago Herald also highly compliments Mayor Sargent on his really able and enlightened inaugural.

I have received numerous inquiries for copies of Mr. James Malcolm's admirable address on "Personal Property Taxation in Illinois," which was briefly mentioned in this correspondence two weeks ago. The address has not yet been printed and it will not be for some weeks. We hope to have it issued in the Single Tax Library, so that it may have the widespread circulation it deserves.

Announcements: February 12, Edward Osgood Brown, on "The Abolition of Privilege;" February 19, Miss Leonora Beck, on "A Single Tax Woman," being a memorial to the late Kate Kennedy, whom Judge Maguire so feelingly eulogized at the Brighton Beach banquet; February 26, William P. Kellett (the millionaire's friend), on "The Crime of Poverty." Mr. Marshall Beck is under promise to give an address early in March, and other good things are in prospect.

The semi-annual election of officers will occur on the first Thursday evening of March, the nominations taking place the Thursday evening preceding.

I hear many anxious inquiries after Mr. George's health, and we of Chicago are overjoyed to think that he is so rapidly recovering. Hundreds of loving hearts here are tenderly solicitous for his good health, and all hope that under milder skies it will be fully and permanently restored.

Louis F. Post has consented to deliver the principal address before the joint meeting of the Equal Suffrage Association and the Single Tax Club at the Sherman House, in this city, on Tuesday evening, February 17, bespeaking a full attendance of Single Taxers.

John Casey, Chicago.—I am doing what I can for the cause in a quiet way, but am unable to "hustle" much on account of physical infirmities, and I am by no means a millionaire.

Ernest J. Foord, Chicago.—Fourteen petitions. We meet our friends on every hand nowadays: Upon the beach, among the jury, on the cars, and now the Single Tax is breaking out among the mayors.

From East, and West, breaks forth the joyful sound
That cheers us on where'er it doth abound:
The game is ours, if they but think or pause,
Or ponder on the justice of our cause.
May favored winds fill full thy fleecy sails,
And bring fair news, on all arriving mails,
About our hardy sailors, good, true, Union jacks:
Hoisting that flag of justice, "Single Tax."

W. W. Knowles, Chicago.—Nothing in connection with the administration of civil affairs is so totally without form and void, so far as justice or system is concerned, as this important matter of taxation. In the Single Tax idea I see the only remedy.

IOWA.

Dr. N. Johnson, Marion.—I am getting around to where I hope to be able to do good work for the cause.

James A. Ford, Sioux City.—I have secured signatures to our petitions, and intend to work the town for more.

MISSOURI.

Charles E. Reid, Kansas City.—We had a very interesting meeting on Sunday afternoon, February 1, at which Mr. Homer Reed read a paper on "Government Control of Monopolies." He evidently wished it to be understood that he did not agree with the doctrine of Henry George, but his address was almost straight Single Tax doctrine. The club passed a resolution asking (1) our Legislature to pass the bill now before it, which provides for the opening of the schoolhouses of evenings for the use of reform and educational societies, clubs, etc., and (2) that the assessments for proposed parks and boulevards be levied upon the property owners already benefited. Mr. Cody has been elected to serve as the local representative of the Hand-to-Hand Club. We hope on our next meeting to have with us Rabbi Berko-witz and Congressman-elect Jeremiah Simpson, of Kansas.

Gus A. Menger, St. Louis.—Five petitions. Almost every letter that I get now from friends tells me of the progress of our ideas. I am now working for the success of that ten cent edition of "Protection or Free Trade" and am doing some good in that way.

G. W. Eadington, Lexington.—Twenty-three petitions. I have caused several in this community to see the new, yet old, truth and justice of the Single Tax.

Percy Pepoon, St. Louis.—Mr. John J. Bailey, secretary of the Mercantile Library, will address the next meeting of the Single Tax League at Bowman's Hall, Thursday night, February 19. His subject will be "Some Fallacies of the Old Political Economy." At the last meeting Charles Edward Turner made an address on "Industrial Slavery Through Land Monopoly," and was followed by Judge Meriwether, who spoke in favor of the Single Tax limited.

An informal meeting of the Reform Club was held here recently at which Mr. C. L. Deyo read an interesting paper on "Taxation and Poverty." Mr. Deyo's address was favorable to the Single Tax. Mr. Keeler made a sensation by claiming that the recent great political protest against the tariff was not so much due to the McKinley bill as to the spread of the Free Trade doctrine through the agricultural districts. Rabbi Sale made a very eloquent speech in which he stated that there was no word in the Hebrew language for pauper, and claimed the remarkable preservation of the Jewish race to be due to the justice of the Hebrew land laws. The Reform Club has a plan on foot to place a number of copies of Henry George's work, "Protection or Free Trade," before each one of the 42,000 Farmer's Alliance organizations in the United States.

TEXAS.

George H. Higgins, El Paso.—At our last meeting the following were elected as officers for the ensuing term: President, G. E. Hubbard; vice-president, J. E. Townsend; secretary and treasurer, M. W. Stanton. A monthly assessment is made for the National League.

Albert Philpot, St. Joseph.—Twenty-seven petitions. I hear but little talk now-a-days of a "Tariff for Revenue Only." Our people seem to regard Free Trade as the coming fact, and hence to talk of direct ad valorem and income taxes for the general Government. Of course I always attempt, on such occasions, to show the failure and injustice of such methods, and wind up by offering the true remedy. I find some of the tracts of the library excellent help in getting signatures to the petition. When I strike one of those long-winded knowalls I just hand him a tract or STANDARD, and he will generally sign the petition when I see him next.

I. J. McCollum, Snow, Leon County.—Sixty signatures. These signatures were gathered in a county that only has one family of five to every square mile, towns included. It is yet the home of the wild turkey, the deer and the wolf. Land in the wild state has little or no rental value; yet the landlord has been watching the earth here for almost a hundred years, and taking tribute from the tillers of the soil. Most of the people here were born and reared amid the fastness of the wilderness, and have had but little advantage of book education, yet I find the average man as clear-headed and in most cases in a better condition to be impressed with the truth than professors that are the product of great institutions of learning. These hardy sons of the forest know they are robbed; and five out of six are saying in unmistakable language, "Give us back our heritage, the Earth!"

COLORADO.

H. C. Niles, Denver.—Thirty-one petitions. We are taking great interest in the tenth edition of "Protection or Free Trade" and I am trying to get the Democratic County and State Committees to make a subscription for distribution among the fossilized Protectionists of this State and county. The chairman of the County Committee, Mr. Whittaker, is reading the book, and is favorably impressed with the idea.

MINNESOTA.

W. A. Carpenter, Minneapolis.—Seventeen petitions. They were taken at the Single Tax meeting of the Chautauqua Circle of Hastings, which was a most enjoyable and profitable gathering. No. 1 is the Presbyterian minister; No. 2 is the City Superintendent of Schools; No. 3 is the president of the circle; Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are merchants. I spoke at this meeting for about an hour, after which questions and answers took up the time for an hour longer. A large quantity of literature was taken and several questions were asked privately after the adjournment, showing the interest of the people in the matter. We shall hear from Hastings again. To-night, February 5, the following committee from this city will consult with the House Judiciary Committee in St. Paul, in relation to the amendment permitting local option in taxation: Mayor P. B. Winston, O. T. Erickson, S. M. Owen, E. J. Phelps, M. P. Finnegan, Henry Mead, Matt Walsh, W. H. Lynn, S. A. Stockwell, George McAlister, C. M. Foote, Titus Mareck, F. G. Winston, S. R. Child, W. A. Carpenter, A. M. Goodrich, H. B. Martin, L. K. Campbell, J. C. Haynes, C. J. Buell.

Charles H. Hohman, St. Paul.—Five petitions. The movement is making great progress in this section. The Single Tax is being discussed on every hand.

G. C. Madison, St. Paul.—Three petitions. Though you have not heard from me much lately, as I am still under the doctor's care, I am by no means idle, but give tracts, mail them or talk with someone daily, and know that the seed is taking root.

G. R. Perkins, Rockford.—Ten petitions. No. 1 was candidate for County School Superintendent; No. 2 is a preacher; Nos. 3, 4 and 5 are merchants—the two latter Republicans.

NEBRASKA.

H. C. Jaynes, Wymore.—Our club has been dormant, or nearly so, for the past two or three years owing to so many of our old members having gone elsewhere. But the seed that was sown has finally germinated and brought forth fourfold. Our local assembly of Knights of Labor have unanimously endorsed the National Single Tax platform, and the Single Tax enters largely into the discussions of each assembly meeting. We have finally reorganized what was the Henry George Single Tax Club as the Wymore Single Tax and Tariff Reform Club, with a membership of nearly forty. Of course they are not all thorough Single Taxers, but favorably inclined and anxious to investigate the subject. While we call ourselves Tariff Reformers we are nearly all in favor of reforming the tariff as the man curtailed his vicious dog. Our club being made up largely of toilers, we cannot do much at present in a financial way to assist in spreading the good cause. Our club adopted the National platform and elected Julius Hamm as president and Henry C. Jaynes, secretary and treasurer.

John B. Steen, Chambers.—Nineteen petitions. I have recently been on a tour through several of the drought-stricken counties and find it an easy matter to obtain signers to the petition where the people are starving. I sometimes feel that people need just about so much starving before they will begin to think for themselves.

CALIFORNIA.

Ign. Ferlin, Virginia Post Office, San Diego County.—Seven petitions. Will soon be able to organize a Single Tax club.

WASHINGTON.

F. M. Marquis, Walla Walla.—Six petitions. I am out of literature, and could use more to advantage. I think I will succeed better in the near future, though I receive many a cold shoulder. The air is full of wild schemes for speculating in land, and the people, therefore, are hard to reach. I am told that the recent contest for the United States Senatorship was the most disgraceful affair ever witnessed in this State.

CANADA.

S. T., Toronto.—The evening News has announced that it will shortly publish a series of articles on the Single Tax.

ENGLAND.

S. T., London.—Recently, Mr. James Harvey Watson, secretary of the Railway Reform Association of Great Britain, lectured before the National Liberal Club, at Whitehall, advocating the purchase of railways by the government and the working of them on a home system, similar to the plan so successfully working in different parts of the continent of Europe. He was ably seconded in his advocacy by Mr. Thomas Briggs, well known to STANDARD readers, who pointed out that it was the duty of the government to purchase the railways and place them on such a footing as will develop the resources of the country.

MICHIGAN SUBSCRIPTIONS.

In accordance with L. W. Hoch's recent appeal to Michigan men, and offer of a prize to the man getting the greatest number of subscribers to the new cheap edition of "Protection or Free Trade?" we will publish weekly till February 25 the list of subscribers from that State. On February 9 the list was: F. Conn, St. Johns, 20 books; P. G. Wood, Undine, 70 books; J. F. Dunnebach, Detroit, 100 books; George Lemke, Menominee, 500 books; L. W. Hoch, Adrian, 2,500 books.

Mr. Lemke expects shortly to increase his subscription to 5,000. Circulars and tracts will be freely supplied on application to W. J. Atkinson, 42 University place, New York.

"PROTECTION OR FREE TRADE?" FOR TEN CENTS.

C. B. Fillebrown, Boston, Mass.—Enclosed find $500 for five thousand copies.

S. F. Shorey, Seattle, Washington.—I think I can dispose of a thousand copies. Am acquainted in every town in Western Washington, and believe I can make expenses and fair wages at it. Last Fall I had a copy in my grip, and every time I took it out to read, some one insisted on buying it.

Billy Radcliffe, Youngstown, Ohio.—Get orders without exertion. Will make a canvass of business houses and public generally. Therefore raise order to six hundred. I think I can make it one thousand.

J. E. Morier, Troy, N. Y.—One hundred of enclosed orders were taken by C. Huest, in the largest dry goods house here, in three hours. They are nearly all from Republican Protectionists.

D. N. Johnson, Marion, Iowa.—Enclosed is my subscription for one hundred copies. The Alliance of this County have all promised me a hearing.

W. W. Forrester, Secretary Tax Reform Association, New Westminster, British Columbia.—We will subscribe for a hundred copies. The plan is good for throwing a flood of light on this much vexed question.

W. B. Addington, Secretary Reform Club, St. Louis, Mo.—Enclosed is $50 for five hundred copies. Will send $50 more soon.

Isaac R. Strouse, Editor Tribune, Rockville, Ind.—Will increase enclosed order for fifty copies, and will give matter editorial mention.

James R. Carret, Boston, Mass.—Put me down for two hundred copies.

Charles E. Reid, Kansas City, Mo.—The first man, a Protectionist, would not subscribe to a Free Trade book till shown the press notices. When he read extract from Omaha Republican, he put his name down for five copies. Two other Republicans later followed suit in exactly the same manner.

John Adams, Dorchester Club, Fields' Building, Fields' Corner, Boston, Mass.—Our club have voted to help you in your noble work, by subscribing for two hundred copies of "Protection or Free Trade?" As soon as those are disposed of, we will do our best to subscribe for more.

In answer to numerous inquiries, it seems necessary to state that the retail price, twenty five cents, will be plainly printed on the outside of each copy, and that ten cents is the lowest price per copy for any quantity. As orders for a few copies do involve greater expense, it was originally intended to charge twelve and one-half cents for orders for less than one hundred copies. This was dropped (at the risk of actual loss on small orders) to secure the largest distribution possible. Cash with each order will save a great deal of clerical work here, and there is very little margin for clerk hire. Please try to have resolutions passed urging members to subscribe by all Alliances, Knights of Labor and workmen's organizations in your locality. We will gladly mail tract extra No. 36 to any names you furnish. These are the tracts containing press notices to which Mr. Reid refers. Some most encouraging news will have to be held over till next week's STANDARD. For circulars, tracts, etc., address

LOWER WAGES—HIGHER PRICES.

New York Times

The continued reduction of wages perceptibly disturbs our high-tariff contemporaries, and some of them are constrained to offer feeble explanations. Unfortunately for them, the people who were too stupid to "understand" the new tariff in the recent campaign have not forgotten their assertions and promises, and know inconsistency when they see it. They have not forgotten that Speaker Reed said, on October 15, at Buffalo:

They ask me whether I consider the McKinley bill just to the poor. Well, I should say so. A bill which has for its object the aiding of the poor by raising their wages, it seems to me, is a just one.

They remember that Mr. John Wanamaker introduced Mr. Blaine at Philadelphia on November 2 in a speech in which he said:

It has been said, and is still being said, that wages in this country are not keeping pace with protection. Everything cannot be done in ten minutes. Neither can wages be raised in one day.

And here is an explanation of the tariff makers' purpose, published on December 24 by the Cleveland Leader, the newspaper representative of McKinley himself:

The aim of the Protectionists in Congress was to preserve the existing level of wages in this country, and they have fully succeeded in doing so.

How well they have succeeded is shown by the reports of reductions which are published every day, and especially by such action as that which has been taken by a well-known manufacturer of knit goods at Little Falls, in this State, whose workmen find that a large increase of tariff duties on imported knit goods has been followed by a loss of 20 per cent. of their wages, and are thus forcibly reminded of their employer's use of the "scare-pay envelope" in 1888 and of his predictions in 1890 as to the effect of the McKinley act upon their incomes. To show why our high-tariff contemporaries are annoyed, we group some of the recent reductions in the following list.

Brooke Iron Company, Birdsborough, Penn., closed February 2, and 450 men thrown out of work because they refused to accept a reduction of about 7 per cent.

Ellis & Lessig Steel and Iron Company, Pottstown, Penn., closed February 2; 700 men out of work because a reduction of 12½ per cent. was rejected.

Hopedale Fabric Mill, Hopedale, Mass.; wages of weavers reduced 2½ cents a yard last week.

Silk mill at Warehouse Point, Conn.; wages of winders and doublers reduced from $1.37 to $1 per day.

Sturtevant Blower Works, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; reduction of from 10 to 30 per cent.

Pottstown Iron Company, Pottstown, Penn.; reduction of about 7 per cent.

Bethlehem Iron Company, Bethlehem, Penn.; reduction of 10 per cent. February 2.

Pennsylvania Steel Company, Steelton, Penn.; reduction of from 8 to 10 per cent. February 1.

Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, Scranton, Penn.; an average reduction of 20 cents a day on January 1.

Homestead Steel Works, Carnegie, Phipps & Co.; 10 per cent. by agreement.

Pullman Palace Car Company's works; new scale making a reduction of about 10 per cent. brought forward January 1.

Otis Iron and Steel Company, Cleveland, Ohio; reduction of 30 per cent. Coal mines, Duquoin, Ill.; reduction from 69 to 60 cents per ton.

Ribbon weavers in Paterson, N. J.; reduction of 15 per cent.

Coal mines near Leavenworth, Kan.; reduction of 11 per cent.

Cocheco Manufacturing Company; wages of weavers reduced 4 per cent.

Manufacturers of pottery, Trenton, N. J.; wages of sanitary ware potters reduced 22 per cent.

Merrimac Mills, Lowell, Mass.; wages of mule spinners reduced 3 cents per hundred.

Buckeye Mower and Reaper Works, Akron, Ohio; reduction of from 30 to 60 per cent. reported on February 3.

Saxony Knitting Mill, Little Falls, N. Y.; reduction of about 20 per cent.

"Protection moves toward higher wages and lower prices," said the Milwaukee Sentinel a few days ago. Ex-Congressman Brewer, a prominent manufacturer of pottery at Trenton, where a reduction of potters' wages has been made, published in the Tribune on October 20 a long statement as to the pottery manufacturers' "additional protection under the new tariff law." The new law, he asserted, "can but be beneficial to the manufacturers, as far as it goes, and it is my opinion that American prices will be firmer in consequence of the benefits above referred to."

Some of our high tariff friends are beginning to account for reductions in the iron and steel trade by reference to reductions of tariff duties. One of them complains that the duty on steel rails was cut down. But did not the Bulletin of the Iron and Steel Association say that the new rate would "fairly protect our steel rail manufacturers"? And we also direct attention to the following from the same Bulletin:

Take it all in all, the new metal schedule is a good one, and our iron and steel manufacturers will never see a better one. It has been secured with much effort and no little anxiety. It is the best that was attainable. We are satisfied.

Mr. Henry W. Oliver, who acted as advisory counsel for Mr. McKinley and his associates, reported that most of the rates of the iron and steel schedule "were those proposed by the manufacturers," and that the new duty on rails would "prevent importations at present or ordinary prices." Speaker Reed complained, after the election, that protected manufacturers had been ungrateful "after they had obtained just what they needed and wanted at the hands of the majority in Congress." Our high tariff friends must try to account in some way for the reduction of wages, but they should not forget everything that they have said in the last six months.

ENCOURAGING HOME INDUSTRY.

Captain Codman in Commercial Advertiser.

Bill Strang is a peddler at Oakbush and he wants a new wagon. Bob Harrington, the wheelwright of the town, says he will build one for him, charging him $130. Strang says he can go down to Peekskill and get a wagon for $100.

"I know that," replies Harrington. "but you must encourage home industry. We'll have a town meeting called and I'll see if I can't force you to take my wagon at my price instead of going to Peekskill, as the Yorktown, Croton and all other men about here do to get their wagons 30 per cent. cheaper, beating you out of the peddling business in that way. We'll see if you can get even with them at somebody else's expense." So they have a town meeting and the case is stated with a great deal of lying on the part of the wheelwright (for when a man wants to steal he is apt to be a liar), and the simple truth on the part of the peddler, who merely says: "I want a wagon on the same terms that other men in my line of business get theirs, so that I shall have a fair chance in the markets of Westchester County."

Bob states his argument thus: "To be sure, I do charge the man $30 more than Joe Lockwood, down at Peekskill, would charge him, but I employ two men in my shop who eat beef and potatoes and wear clothes. If I get that $30 extra I can pay those two fellows higher wages—that is, if I have a mind to; so it is on their account that I ask all you farmers, from one or two of whom I will occasionally buy a bushel of potatoes, to pass a vote that the town shall make an appropriation of $30. It would be all the same to me if the money came out of Bill Strang or out of the town, only if the town don't pay Bill says he'll have to go out of business."

Notwithstanding, Bill received permission to supply himself with a new wagon, in the place of the old one which was no longer serviceable, wherever he could procure it to the best advantage; and to the great delight of the farmers' wives, who preferred to patronize their own townsmen rather than strangers, he continued his business of peddling fish.

As for Bob Harrington, when having lost his monopoly he was thrown upon his own resources he ceased to be a beggar, and, devoting himself to honest industry, was soon able to turn out wagons as cheap and as good as those built by Joe Lockwood, at Peekskill.

BUT PROTECTIONISTS DON'T BELIEVE THEIR OWN FIGURES.

Philadelphia Record.

If the effect of tariff duties were not to raise the prices of articles upon which such duties are levied there would be no advantage in tariffs. The duty on the imported article is added to the cost of it, the consumer paying it and the Government receiving it. If the duty be so high as to be prohibitory it is added to the price of the domestic article unless the price be cut down by competition. Competition is made ineffective by combination. No tariff is a success if it do not raise prices. Yet the advocates of the McKinley tariff are trying to deaden the force of popular aversion by showing that it has not raised prices. When they shall come to believe their own figures they will be the loudest advocates of repeal.

THE SINGLE TAX PLATFORM.

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE SINGLE TAX LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES AT COOPER UNION, NEW YORK, SEPT. 3, 1890.

We assert as our fundamental principle the self-evident truth enunciated in the Declaration of American Independence, that all men are created equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights.

We hold that all men are equally entitled to the use and enjoyment of what God has created and of what is gained by the general growth and improvement of the community of which they are a part. Therefore, no one should be permitted to hold natural opportunities without a fair return to all for any special privilege thus accorded to him, and that value which the growth and improvement of the community attach to land should be taken for the use of the community.

We hold that each man is entitled to all that his labor produces. Therefore no tax should be levied on the products of labor.

To carry out these principles we are in favor of raising all public revenues for national, state, county and municipal purposes by a single tax upon land values, irrespective of improvements, and of the abolition of all forms of direct and indirect taxation.

Since in all our states we now levy some tax on the value of land, the single tax can be instituted by the simple and easy way of abolishing, one after another, all other taxes now levied, and commensurately increasing the tax on land values, until we draw upon that one source for all expenses of government, the revenue being divided between local governments, state governments and the general government, as the revenue from direct taxes is now divided between the local and state governments; or, a direct assessment being made by the general government upon the states and paid by them from revenues collected in this manner.

The single tax we propose is not a tax on land, and therefore would not fall on the use of land and become a tax on labor.

It is a tax, not on land, but on the value of land. Thus it would not fall on all land, but only on valuable land, and on that not in proportion to the use made of it, but in proportion to its value—the premium which the user of land must pay to the owner, either in purchase money or rent, for permission to use valuable land. It would thus be a tax, not on the use or improvement of land, but on the ownership of land, taking what would otherwise go to the owner as owner, and not as user.

In assessments under the single tax all values created by individual use or improvement would be excluded, and the only value taken into consideration would be the value attaching to the bare land by reason of neighborhood, etc., to be determined by impartial periodical assessments. Thus the farmer would have no more taxes to pay than the speculator who held a similar piece of land idle, and the man who on a city lot erected a valuable building would be taxed no more than the man who held a similar lot vacant.

The single tax, in short, would call upon men to contribute to the public revenues, not in proportion to what they produce or accumulate, but in proportion to the value of the natural opportunities they hold. It would compel them to pay just as much for holding land idle as for putting it to its fullest use.

The single tax, therefore, would—

1. Take the weight of taxation off of the agricultural districts where land has little or no value irrespective of improvements, and put it on towns and cities where bare land rises to a value of millions of dollars per acre.

2. Dispense with a multiplicity of taxes and a horde of taxgatherers, simplify government and greatly reduce its cost.

3. Do away with the fraud, corruption and gross inequality inseparable from our present methods of taxation, which allow the rich to escape while they grind the poor. Land cannot be hid or carried off, and its value can be ascertained with greater ease and certainty than any other.

4. Give us with all the world as perfect freedom of trade as now exists between the states of our Union, thus enabling our people to share, through free exchanges, in all the advantages which nature has given to other countries, or which the peculiar skill of other peoples has enabled them to attain. It would destroy the trusts, monopolies and corruptions which are the outgrowths of the tariff. It would do away with the fines and penalties now levied on anyone who improves a farm, erects a house, builds a machine, or in any way adds to the general stock of wealth. It would leave everyone free to apply labor or expend capital in production or exchange without fine or restriction, and would leave to each the full product of his exertion.

5. It would, on the other hand, by taking for public use that value which attaches to land by reason of the growth and improvement of the community, make the holding of land unprofitable to the mere owner, and profitable only to the user. It would thus make it impossible for speculators and monopolists to hold natural opportunities unused or on half used, and would throw open to labor the infinite field of employment which the earth offers to man. It would thus solve the labor problem, do away with involuntary poverty, raise wages in all occupations to the full earnings of labor, make over-production impossible until all human wants are satisfied, render labor-saving inventions a blessing to all, and cause such an enormous production and such an equitable distribution of wealth as would give to all comfort, leisure and participation in the advantages of an advancing civilization.

With respect to monopolies other than the monopoly of land, we hold that where free competition becomes impossible, as in telegraphs, railroads, water and gas supplies, etc., such business becomes a proper social function, which should be controlled and managed by and for the whole people concerned, through their proper government, local, state or national, as may be.

AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM

THE STANDARD is of especial value to those who seek to reach the public generally. It circulates in ALL OF THE UNITED STATES and has regular subscribers in every country in which English is spoken. It reaches as thoughtful a body of people as can be found in the world, and it numbers among its constant and careful readers many of THE MOST EMINENT PUBLIC MEN and thousands of students of Political Economy, the Social Problem and Political Principles, as distinguished from mere machine politics.

As the exponent of the principles of THE NEW POLITICAL ECONOMY, THE STANDARD has the loyal and enthusiastic support of a large and ever growing body of men and women, who not only take it and read it, but thousands of whom pass it on to others, or remail it to those who do not feel that they can afford to subscribe for a paper of its class and price. Few publications have so many readers for each copy issued.

The announcements and regular reports of THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE SINGLE TAX LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES are made through THE STANDARD, and from time to time copies of the paper are sent to the enrolled signers of the Committee's petition, NUMBERING NEARLY 100,000. The exact number to date can always be found in the Committee's weekly report, which leads the Single Tax News in each number of the paper.

THE STANDARD is now in the fifth year of its existence. It has a steadfast constituency of paying subscribers. The people who get it want it, and pay for it. Its advertising rates are moderate, and advertisers using its columns have a reasonable assurance that their announcements will be read. Price per line considered,

RECRUIT SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS AT THE OLD PRICES.

For the convenience of persons wishing to send THE STANDARD ON TRIAL TO THEIR FRIENDS, we have prepared recruit subscription books. They are handsomely bound in heavy alligator paper, and sold at prices regulated by the number of blanks in each book.

These blanks are each an order on THE STANDARD TO SEND THE PAPER to the person designated, and they save all trouble of remittance, as they are paid for in advance. As soon as one of the blanks reaches our business office a postal card is sent to the person designated, informing him that at the request of the sender THE STANDARD will be sent to him FOR FOUR WEEKS, beginning with the next issue, and that in case he does not wish to continue it IT WILL BE STOPPED AT THE END OF THAT TIME. This attracts more attention to it than is given to a simple copy sent out directly from the office.

EVERY ACTIVE WORKER FOR THE SINGLE TAX should have in his pocket a recruit subscription book, in order that he may be able to tear out the blanks and order the paper sent to anyone with whom he has been having an argument on the subject. If our friends will USE THE STUBS IN THE BOOKS and keep a record of those to whom they order the paper sent they will be able to follow the matter up and probably make converts.
